Effort of Churches to Extend Scope of Work.

The churches are making an effort to extend the scope of their work. They are realizing that special urges are required at times in matters religious as well as in the ordinary affairs of life. The business that does not make a special effort now and then is on the chute and will hit the water soon.

Depopulation of Rural Districts.

Various public men assign various causes for the depopulation of rural districts and the enlargement of the cities. Some point to the tariff. Others declare that farming is not a continuously profitable pursuit.

Perhaps the fact that farms are larger than formerly may be a partial explanation. Agricultural machinery enables a man to cultivate a larger area than in the past.

Education And Religion.

The fact rather than the causes must be reckoned with. The plan of Consolidated Schools seems likely to meet the situation, so far as education is concerned.

One or other of the little churches may be forced to give up the struggle. And yet, even in such districts, there is reason to believe that if the rural churches were better adjusted to the specialized task they face, they might awaken the interest of the body of non-church-goers generally found in such districts.

In the meantime, the task is to stir up the existing members, give them a vision of the place of power and influence, a lively, earnest church may have in any community, and awaken them to the splendor of their high calling as Christians.

The fine thing about the forward movements of the various churches as co-ordinated in the united national campaign, is that the appeal is not a selfish one. The members are urged not to consider their own troubles and difficulties, but to turn their eyes towards the mission fields at home and abroad.
