TRADE UNIONS TO BRING BACK B.C. FEDERATION

Movement of Those Holding International Cards to Reorganize in This Province.

Trades unionists who are loyal to the international organization and who have little or no sympathy with the radical One Big Union movement will probably act within a few days towards bringing the B. C. Federation of Labor back to life as an auxiliary of the Trades and Labor Congress, says the Victoria Colonist.

If they feel that the Federation is not the most efficient form of organization and not worth resurrection, they will probably turn to the other alternative and form a Provincial executive representative of the international unions in British Columbia. This executive would assume many of the duties and responsibilities formerly borne by the Federation prior to its control by the O. B. U. element and the return of its charter to the Trades and Labor Congress. In most of the provinces of Canada the executive form of organization has been adopted. The B. C. Federation was formed to secure a greater degree of self-autonomy. Now it has been "ditched" in favor of the O. B. U. by the extremist ring at present dominant.

The convention of the B. C. Federation of Labor here this week may have created a wrong impression in the minds of some people as to the tendencies or organized labor in the province. The delegates, or the great majority of them, belonged to the more extreme group of O. B. U. supporters. Conservative labor was hardly represented at all, because many of the locals refused to send delegates to the convention on the ground that the Federation, by returning its charter to the Trades and Labor Congress, was now functioning as an out-law organization.

Ignored Convention.
The gradual assumption of control and manipulation of the B. C. Federation by the radical forces which, at the Calgary convention last year, adopted resolutions commending sovietism and which, at the convention here reaffirmed this attitude, had the effect of creating widespread disaffection in labor circles. Many of the international locals, refusing to accept the O. B. U. standard and declining to have anything to do with the delegates who did support this theory, decided to ignore the convention. The result was that the action taken and the speeches delivered during the convention could not fairly be taken as an indication of B. C. labor's attitude on the issues of the day.

The O. B. U. claims 1,000 members in Victoria, and many of these men also hold international cards, playing safe for the time being by straddling the fence. On the other hand, it is estimated that there are 5,000 international trades unionists in the city, some of whom are temporarily absent owing to the cessation of ship-building operations and allied industries. The opposition to the O. B. U. in the ranks of Victoria's organized labor, according to those in a good position to judge, is overwhelming. Some regard the O. B. U. as premature and Utopian, although all right in theory; others claim it has no good points at all and should be flatly turned down as being simply an outgrowth of red radicalism. If it came to a showdown, it is estimated that union labor here would favor the international as against the One Big Union by a four-to-one vote.

Want Charter Back.

So far as can be ascertained, the most likely development is the calling of a meeting of loyal international unionists with a view to perpetuating direct association with the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada and the American Federation of Labor. The return of the charter surrendered by the O. B. U. dominated Federation will be asked, and the situation will be much the same as ever before, with the exception that the O. B. U., instead of disguising under a false name, will be openly operating in the province, supported by a weekly newspaper with a circulation claimed to be 20,000.

At the Victoria convention the fate of the B. C. Federationist was determined. In future it will be guided by the policy laid down by the directors of the new company, composed of representatives of the various organizations affiliated with the O. B. U. It will be controlled by the O. B. U., and judging from speeches made at the convention, will cease to uphold the international organization, as in the past.

"A CAMOUFLAGE KISS" AT EMPRESS THEATRE

June Caprice, the girl who is like her name, will be seen tonight at the Empress Theatre in "A Camouflage Kiss," one of the prettiest little comedy-dramas that has been here for many a day. It is a romance of the 20th Century, an up-to-date story of up-to-date people.

June is the centre figure of the play and this interesting girl is just as charming as ever.
