Passing of Governor.

The passing of James Dunsmuir, one of the rich men of the province, possibly the richest, brings to mind the part that the Dunsmuir family have taken in the development of the province. Robert Dunsmuir came to this country to develop certain coal fields and failed. He made no noise about it, but turned his attention elsewhere. Vancouver Island was his point of adventure this time and he set to work on the coal fields, which have proved very rich and which not only made him rich, but also have been the means of support of many thousands of people. He put Vancouver Island on the industrial map.

There were other things Robert Dunsmuir did besides coal mining. He built seventy miles of railroad on Vancouver Island. True he was given immense tracts of valuable land as well as coal fields for doing it, but at that time no one else was prepared to go ahead with the road, and the people of the Island were immensely pleased at the opportunity to get the road built, even at the price paid. It is also true that the railway lost money for the owner from the time it was built, practically until it was eventually sold to the C. P. R.

It must not be forgotten that Robert Dunsmuir was not alone in his ventures. He had a wife who, it is said, had a better head than he. She co-operated with him and helped him to hold on to his money so that he was enabled to carry out the larger schemes. The influence of women in this connection is often forgotten. The men get the credit.

Different Man From His Father.

James Dunsmuir did not inherit much of the initiative of his father or the tenacity. He, however, kept the development going that his father had commenced. He was a pretty good business head and he made the coal mines pay. The Comox properties were developed to such a point that, when the boom days came, he was able to sell out to the Mackenzie & Mann interests and the Canadian Collieries concern was formed, a concern which was unable to pay dividends for a number of years on the immense capitalization under which it groaned. Dunsmuir received ten millions for the mines and he paid a million dollars commission on the sale to B. J. Perry, R. T. Elliott and others of Victoria, who put through the deal.

It was before the mines were sold, however, that the political condition of the province was in a chaotic condition. Governor McInnes had called on Joseph Martin to form a cabinet and Martin had taken a number of small nonentities in as ministers, much to the disgust of the people. He appealed to the country and was beaten. Then there seemed no political Moses in sight. The province was in bad condition financially as well as politically, and, as a last hope, the people turned to James Dunsmuir. He formed a Government, and, although it lasted but a short time, it served the purpose of giving the people time to think. That was Dunsmuir's only political venture. Later he was appointed lieutenant-governor of the province, a position which he filled with dignity. Then he disappeared from public view and lived the life of a recluse at Hatley Park, Colwood. His family, however, kept the name of Dunsmuir in the limelight socially, although it is fast disappearing as the young ladies are adopting other names.

Sterling Character of 19th Century Type.

James Dunsmuir was not an outstanding figure, but he was a type of man who was able to take advantage of the conditions that arose and to watch his own interests. His employees who knew him personally were very loyal to him and he was always true to them. For the later developments of political and social life, however, he had little sympathy, or if he had, he never showed it. He was a man of the nineteenth century, not of the twentieth. His passing will not affect the world to any great extent.

Ten Years Ago in Prince Rupert

JUNE 8, 1910

The Port Simpson arriving this morning brings news of a disastrous fire at Port Essington last night in which the English Church, three stores and several other buildings were destroyed in a fire originating in a Chinese dive. Captain Jackman and the crew of the Port Simpson did valuable work in finally extinguishing the blaze.

The Prince Rupert Mining Stock Exchange opened this morning with J. B. Talpey as official caller. The first bids were rather timid, but the buyers soon became warmed up to active business.

The first of the permanent city sewer system will be laid by S. P. McDermie & Co. who have obtained the contract for the work. The district to be served is from Fulton Street west to Eighth Street and from Fraser Street south to the waterfront. The expense will be met by the $25,000 granted by the government.

A verdict of self-inflicted death caused by intimidation is the coroner's jury verdict over the body of the late Mrs. Alexia Bianco, Blackmail is said to have been the indirect cause for the deed.
