tracts. Some people are bound to come in not fitted for the life, but their departure does not mean that the country has failed them. It means rather that they have failed the country. Others will come in, take their place and reap the benefit.

Masset and the North Island, pending market development and further increase in the lumber industry, which is one that must increase in the future, have the fishing to depend on for the purpose of raising the small amount of cash they require, and there is also the tourist trade. turesque, and the boating and fishing hard to equal.

Is there any other place where it is possible to travel as on Massett Inlet? Up for thirty odd miles on one tide at the rate of about five miles an hour without any other motive power but the tide, and down again on the next tide.

Has 1915 been a successful year for the Massett farmer? Well, to a certain extent it has. One man there is talking about shipping a car load of celery to the prairies. Celery, an article that, provided quality is there, always fetches a good price, and there are many acres of celery looking fine around Massett. That is only one line out of many, such as potatoes and other roots.

The herds are not large as yet, but are increasing as fast as nature will allow, and cattle raising is a proved profitable line to follow. They are showing what they have done, at the Fair in September. They are producing quality and quantity, and their place in the running for the Dewar Cup, the district trophy, will certainly not be empty.
