Serbian Appeal.

The Serbian premier, M. Pachitch, has appealed to Britain for speedy aid.

The Marquis of Lansdowne, in a speech delivered in the House of Lords, stated that it is highly improbable that the Serbian army can long withstand the pressure of the Austro-Germans in the north of Serbia, with a "stab in the back" from Bulgaria in the south.

Wealthy Conspirator.

New York, Oct. 27.—Max Breitung, who is under arrest for complicity in a plot to blow up American munition plants, is a cousin of the wealthy capitalist, E. C. Breitung, of Marquette, Michigan, who bought the steamer Dacia, which was held up off Galveston and ultimately was taken prize by the French in the English Channel. Max Breitung had bought a quantity of high explosives for Lieut. Fay, the ring-leader in the plot.

TYPHOON SWEEPS OVER PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

(Special to The Daily News.)

Manilla, Oct. 27.—A typhoon has struck the southern portion of the island of Luzon, the largest of the Philippine Islands. The town of Tobacco has been wiped out and 170 people have been killed and 800 injured. The damage done to the hemp and rice crops is estimated at a million dollars.

SHIPMENT OF FISH FOR GREAT BRITAIN

The Prince George did not get away until about four o'clock yesterday afternoon. Increase of business all along the coast was the cause of delay. On the way north, the George had an exceptionally large general cargo for Anyox, and there she had to load a quantity of blister copper for trans-shipment at Prince Rupert for New York.

At Prince Rupert she had to take on board eight carloads of frozen fish from the Canadian Fish and Cold Storage Company for shipment to Great Britain. At Seattle, the fish will be transferred to the liner Minnesota, owned by the Great Northern Railway Company. The Minnesota will make the trip round the Horn with a general cargo. It is believed that, on arrival in Britain, the liner will be sold, as the railway company believes that the American Seamen's Bill will create conditions on the coast which will make it impossible to handle her profitably.

The reason why the liner has to make the long trip round the Horn is that no ship owned by a railroad company may use the canal.

MORE ADVERTISING FOR PRINCE RUPERT

The following article shows how the Americans realize Prince Rupert's advantages:

Alaska has the finest halibut fishing industry in the country. It wants to keep it. It is in danger of losing it unless the government fights to retain it as loyally and vigorously as Canada is now fighting to take it away. I found the halibut fishing question a live one, especially at Ketchikan, a center of the industry. The Grand Trunk Pacific railway has been completed to the northwest corner of Canada, terminating at Prince Rupert, a few miles from the international boundary between British Columbia and Alaska. Alaska has no direct rail connection with eastern markets. These conditions with the present American shipping regulations are throwing an enormous volume of trade—the catching, icing and shipping of fish caught on the Alaskan banks for the market of the United States—into the Canadian channel, thus building up and supporting Canadian towns with American resources and capital.

Alaska asks for legislation that will require vessels engaged in fishing for the American market to discharge the fish at an American port, so that if Canada wants our fish the Canadian railroad can establish a ferry service from Prince Rupert across to the nearest Alaskan port, which is Ketchikan, a distance of ninety miles. This can be traversed in a few hours.—Leslie's Magazine.

HALIBUT SCHOONER LOST RUDDER IN GALE

The crew of the Jenny F. Decker, an American halibut schooner which visits Prince Rupert regularly, had quite an exciting experience off the Alaskan coast last week. While drifting and reefing sails in a heavy gale about fifty miles south of Ketchikan, the rudder jumped out of the heel with the result that the stem snapped, leaving the boat practically helpless.

The crew managed to get a boom rigged, got the boat slewed around before the wind, and ran before it for Ketchikan, which port they made in fairly good time. One of the crew, who has arrived in Prince Rupert, states that the gale was the heaviest he has ever experienced on the coast.

WEDDING BELLS

A wedding of interest to Prince Rupert people was solemnized at Christ Church, Vancouver, last Wednesday, when Rev. G. C. McCassion united in marriage Miss Raghuild Austinson, of Boda, Norway, to Kenneth Rood, of Prince Rupert.

The bride was given away by her brother and the groomsmen was Mr. Edwin J. Cobb, of Prince Rupert. The bride wore a traveling suit of brown and a picture hat.

After the ceremony, the bridal party was entertained to dinner at the Castle Hotel and later the happy couple left for Seattle. On their return from the wedding trip they will reside in Prince Rupert.

Mr. Rood is one of the real old timers of this northern coast, having been in the district many years before the advent of the railroad.

LADIES ARE OFFERED an excellent opportunity to get a handsome winter coat at a bargain in the manufacturer's sample coats now "On Sale" for one week only at Wallace's.
