FINANCIAL SUCCESS

The ex-mayor finds it quite simple to connect up the "numerous civic trips abroad" (there were two of them) with the upkeep of the fire department. It must be apparent to all that, even if the council had found it necessary to add six men to the fire department instead of reducing the staff by one, the mayor would have gone to Victoria and New York just the same.

Mr. Bowser may have said there would be no obstacles in the way of the bill, but there were obstacles nevertheless, one of these being the late date on which the legislature opened. Mayor McCaffery found much work to do in Victoria and did it well.

The New York trip was not only unavoidable but absolutely essential. When Mayor McCaffery took office, he had two great ends in view,—the reduction of operating expenses in the city and the placing of the bonds. He has succeeded admirably in both. From the day he took office, he set to work on the sale of the bonds and the passing of the necessary legislation, with his mind made up not to let go until he had carried the deal to a final and successful conclusion in New York, with the treasury certificates cancelled forever.

Evidently, the ex-mayor would have stayed at home and left everything to the tender mercies of the brokers, and probably the result would have been another case of defaulting on June 1st, as we had last year, or we might have had a repetition of his fruitless trip to Montreal.

Incidentally, by putting the deal through in New York, the city has been saved the sum of $2,835 in insurance and express charges, which is quite a consideration in these days. It is quite possible that, instead of the trip having cost the city money, it will show a margin of profit.

The ex-mayor made an expensive trip to Montreal. He failed. McCaffery succeeded in selling the city bonds, thus saving the city $58,000 per year, in addition to the $10,000 he has saved in the operating of the city's business, which the ex-mayor said was impossible. Mayor McCaffery stayed right with the job; thoroughly understood every move on the financial board; completed his work in a businesslike way, and the council will not find it necessary to send a wire to New York to find out just exactly what terms he had agreed to, as was necessary after the Montreal trip of the ex-mayor.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

The London Times reply to the Berlin peace speeches was of a thorough-going belligerent type, not because the Times likes war but that, through this war, lasting peace can only come by fighting to a finish.

Sullivan's wireless messages did not convey the meaning he sought to convey in his evidence at the enquiry. The hand-picked majority on the committee will much prefer the verbal evidence to the wireless messages.

Monte White says he was offered money by Sullivan to come up to Victoria and give evidence for the government. When he refused, Sullivan threatened that, if he came up at all, he would be jailed. White gave his affidavit that he secured the pluggers for the Tories, but the affidavit was not accepted, as this was not the kind of evidence required by Miller and Company.

The white-washing report brought in by the public accounts committee is just exactly the kind of a report a Roblin committee would have brought in on an enquiry into the Winnipeg scandals. Unfortunately for the government the public were permitted to read a good deal of the evidence.

Perhaps the funniest part of the report is where it seeks to show that Contractor McDonald was a philanthropist who handed over an extra $39,000 when the Tory graft committee instructed him to do so.

Things seem to be getting quite interesting again on the Greek frontier and King Constantine, who has been having a quiet spell, is going to have some fine points in neutrality to settle. His easiest and safest solution will be to join the Allies.

The ex-mayor states that there was only one bond house bidding on the city bonds. If this is a sample of his knowledge of the transaction, one can easily understand why he makes the statements he does. At the last moment, Spitzer, Rorick Company had to get a hustle on in order to get in on the deal at all.

was not in sight at the time either.

Were Refused.

The Liberals had arranged for two scrutineers in this place, but the returning officer objected and man who, according to the voters' list committee, had not resided at the Japanese boarding house which was given as the address, for five years before. So he was sworn and took an oath. He voted. Wismer insisted that the man be arrested. The returning officer would give him no satisfaction, though Wismer thought he might at least have advised getting an information out. But he did not do so. The justice of the peace appealed to Mr. Mellish, who was the counsel for him. Mellish gave instruction that two Liberal scrutineers should not be permitted. Still later, two suspicious characters came in and walked about the booths. Wismer was close on their heels and they left the polling place.

Later, one of the men on the outside in the interests of the Liberal party, told Wismer he heard one of the men say he had "voted five times already and was going to vote five times more before 5 o'clock, but that the man upstairs was on to them. Wismer instructed that these men be followed. He was told they went and met Mellish on Water street, then went into pool room. Mr. Miller, assisted by Dr. McGuire, tried by a fire of questions, to shake Wismer's testimony, but they were unsuccessful. Mr. McTaggart corroborated Wismer.
