SALMON MONOPOLY

The breaking of the salmon fishing and canning monopoly is the most important question in British Columbia, to the people of Prince Rupert and the north generally. The facts of the case are familiar to all and need not be gone into at length at this time. Suffice it to say that the business of canning salmon is in the hands of a few, who control the salmon fishing of these northern waters in such a way that the white fisherman has no chance to make a living by fishing for salmon. The system of cannery boat-rating places the whole matter entirely in the hands of the cannerymen, as it keeps them entirely independent of the independent fisherman.

Towards the close of the legislature, Parker Williams introduced a resolution calling upon Ottawa to break the cannery boat-rating and to do away with the Pacific committee of the Fisheries Advisory Board, and to replace the latter by representatives of the canners and the fishermen. The doing away with the cannery boat-rating is the first step towards the freedom of the fishermen.

To this, William Manson, of Skeena, who ought to know conditions here thoroughly, moved an amendment to the effect that a royal commission be appointed to go into the matter, while he disapproved of any change in the representation to Ottawa. The people of this coast, and Canada generally, have had long and trying experiences of royal commissions and their expensive futility, and, in any case, how can any commission find out more than is already known about the various phases of the salmon industry? A committee of fishermen and cannerymen could tell Ottawa in two hours all that is to be told about present conditions in the salmon industry.

The appointment of a royal commission is simply the usual way of stalling off the evil day when the cannerymen will have to give up their monopoly. The present Pacific committee simply represents the cannery interests, so that Ottawa gets only one side of the question. The fishermen of this district have already supplied in detail all their side of the question, so that there is no need of any commission to re-gather the facts. The cannerymen have all along made their position so clear that the Advisory Board has had no difficulty in arriving at a decision—as to what they want, therefore, why in the name of common sense is there any necessity to appoint a commission? Let the Advisory Board deal fairly and squarely with the facts as they have them, or have Ottawa find a substitute for the Pacific committee by giving the fishermen representation on the board.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Sir Sam's charges against Sir Courtney Bennett have been taken up in New York and one big firm of contractors asks to have its representative testify before the Meredith-Duff commission. It looks as if Sam, as usual, had said more than he should have.

Evidently Sir Sam's military capabilities are of a higher order than Kitchener's (according to Sam), as he thinks that things would have been run differently had he been in charge. Perhaps Kitchener did not appoint enough honorary colonels.

The later reports of the naval battle are much more favorable than the early German accounts. The Germans will think the Kiel Canal a much safer spot than the North Sea in the future.

For once in a way the doings of the Canadians at Ypres overshadowed the big fighting around Verdun in the war despatches yesterday.

The Journal tries to excuse the big rake-off on fuse contracts by stating that Yoakum and Company were big capitalists. Had they not been big capitalists, they would never have got near the graft. They did not put their own capital into the making of fuses, however, but simply placed the orders elsewhere.
