HUGHES-ALLISON

It is an encouraging sign of the rise of public indignation against war profiteers that the Conservative press generally refuses to follow the Toronto News in seeking to pillory Messrs. Carvell and Kite for bringing about the fuse inquiry. The endeavor of Col. Allison and his friends to spread abroad the idea that Mr. Carvell had been employing pro-German law firms in the United States to pry into the secrets of munition making has failed. The prompt serving of notice of libel actions upon the papers which assisted in the work of slandering Mr. Carvell has brought about a change of tactics. Messrs. Kite and Carvell are now declared to be lacking in patriotism, in that they are diverting the time and attention of the Minister of Militia and the leading officials of his department from the work of organizing Canada's overseas forces to the safeguarding of their own honor before the court of inquiry.

The Montreal Mail, the managing director of which is a very strong Conservative and a half-brother of the Minister of Finance, refuses to "sand-bag" Messrs. Carvell and Kite at the suggestion of The Toronto News. It says: "The Daily Mail has no particular use for Mr. Kite, who made the charges, and it has still less for F. B. Carvell, who is exploiting them. The fact remains that enough has already come to light at the Meredith-Duff inquiry to prove that Mr. Kite would have done the country a disservice if he had failed to bring to the attention of Parliament and the country the information which was placed in his hands. Enough has been brought out to lend credibility to his charges and to the inferences which the public drew from them. The disclosures thus far have proved the imperative necessity of delving deeper into the Allison transactions. That is enough to warrant Mr. Kite's action in putting his case before the House. It is not enough to justify positive or sweeping conclusions one way or the other. The case is still 'sub judge,' and it is strange that the party press is permitted to draw such positive conclusions which have no other object than to mislead and bewilder the public."

The truth is that the appearance of Col. Allison in so many transactions between the Shell Committee, the Militia Department, and the seekers for war contracts has led the public generally, irrespective of politics, to believe that, in the opinion of would-be contractors, Allison's "pull" was a marketable commodity. If the Minister of Militia persists in sticking to his "Intervener-General" the people will assuredly demand at the close of the inquiry that a new Minister be appointed. A continuation of the Hughes-Allison dictatorship will not be tolerated.—Toronto Globe.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Once more the German attack on Verdun has failed. If they just keep this sort of warfare up long enough there will be no need for a general Allied offensive on the western front, as the Germans will soon batter themselves to pieces.

Sam Hughes, instead of giving evidence before the Meredith-Duff commission, seemed to think that a lecture upon the high qualities of Colonel Allison as a price-getter was sufficient. Sam came to earth with a thump when some of his own correspondence was produced.

The Canadians seem to have defended their lines with the utmost bravery in the recent Ypres fighting, but there is no mention of their having brought machine guns to play upon the advancing

RAILROAD BATTALION IS NOW BEING FORMED

Arrangements are now well under way for the recruiting of the B. C. Roadworkers' Battalion for active service. Col. J. W. Stewart, who is now in Ottawa completing arrangements, will take active command of the battalion. J. B. L. Macdonald, the well known contractor, has charge of recruiting and he hopes to be able to enlist a full battalion of 1,200 men from the various railroad centres in the province, including Prince Rupert.

Mr. Macdonald states that track layers, graders, bridgemen, trainmen, engineers and men of practically every line of railroad work will be needed. The battalion will be engaged in construction and operating work in connection with transportation lines at the front.

Germans. The only weapon mentioned is the bayonet. Had they enough of machine guns?

Yuan Shi Kai is dead, but there is no mention of the malady which carried him off nor was any warning given that he was unwell. Yuan made a good many enemies during his reign as president of the latest republic.

Perhaps the reason for the retreat of the Germans from Verdun was the fact that the Russians required some desperate stopping on the other front. The next eight weeks will tell us whether there is to be any fighting next winter.

The man who is satisfied with petty successes will never achieve great ones.

HOW SIR SAM HUGHES INFLUENCED ORDERS

A most convincing reply to this evidence was brought out in the form of letters from General Hughes himself to General Bertram requesting favorable consideration to particular individuals in the placing of orders. Among the persons recommended to General Bertram for an order was General Hughes' own brother-in-law, Dr. MacAlpin, of Lindsay. In another letter to General Bertram he wrote: "This will introduce to you Mr. Charles Burgoyne, of Fenelon Falls, in my riding. He is desirous of securing a contract for the manufacture of boxes for shells. I wish you would give him full plans, specifications and prices complete for said boxes. He is thoroughly reliable in every sense. Thanking you for your goodness. Faithfully, (signed) Sam Hughes."

Sir Sam's reply to the reading of the above and several other letters asking for consideration for friends in the granting of shell orders was that letters had been stolen and that men had "broken into our offices." He said he had affidavits to prove this statement, but did not offer to produce any proof.

Messrs. Carvell and Markey, against whom he directed the charges, indignantly denied the charges and asserted that all the documents had been got legitimately, many of the letters having been sent to them through the mails by anonymous senders. "A satisfactory explanation," said Sir William Meredith.
