GREAT SILENCES

On Saturday night, for once in a way, the Tory leaders were obliged to face a free-thinking, free-speaking audience and, judging by their facial expressions, they did not relish it.

The speeches were remarkable for what they did not contain. The P. G. E. was naturally given a wide berth.

Bowser made no attempt to defend his illegal act in handing over to the P. G. E. millions more than their agreement called for.

The Vancouver "plugging" charges proved a boomerang, and Bowser had to retire to his dug-out when the audience demanded that he take back his statement.

the audience would have backed him almost to a man. William Manson will have ample opportunity to carry on this part of the debate later.

Of course, the speakers referred to the reports of the Tory-ruled public accounts committee and claimed that no funds had been misapplied, though $95,000,000 had been spent since 1903.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

H. B. Thomson made a bad break when he said that "since the Liberal investigators had found nothing corrupt after three months they must be a bunch of 'dubs'."

William Manson used the right word when he described the investigation as "trying."

It was funny to see how Bowser ducked when John L. Sullivan's name was mentioned on Saturday night.

Right over the door of the Westholme Theatre on Saturday night there was the word 'GHAFT' in huge letters.

One Tory on leaving the meeting on Saturday night consoled himself thus, "The Liberals will win in Prince Rupert city, but Manson will get a majority on the outside."

Billy Ross tried feebly to explain that they were out looking for information in regard to the wants of the districts. The speeches showed that they were out electioneering, and nothing else. The public purse has to stand the expense of this tour.

It was funny to watch Chairman Nelson rush to the front of the stage on Saturday night, the moment Bowser had sounded his last syllable.
