SHIPPING FISH

In March, 1915, an order-in-council was made to encourage American fishermen to bring their fish to Prince Rupert. In the past fifteen months the results have been gratifying and so much American fish was brought to this port that American fish-buying firms opened up branches here. In the halibut business, very small or very large fish are reckoned as culls, and there is a market for them only near the port of entry, unless they are kept frozen. The American firms found a ready market for their small and large fish in Seattle and they were allowed to ship them there in bond by steamer. This continued, without a word of protest from the customs authorities, for fifteen months, when suddenly there came an order from Ottawa stating that no more fish could be shipped in bond by steamer. Later, a useless modification was made permitting this fish to be shipped by boat to Vancouver on condition that it was transferred to rail there. As this necessitates the carrying of the shipments across the city of Vancouver, the extra handling being very injurious to the fish as well as very expensive, it is of little advantage to the handlers.

On Tuesday, H. S. Clements, M. P., interviewed the fisheries committee of the Board of Trade in the matter, and coolly informed them that they need expect nothing more along this line, as the order-in-council must be lived up to. Now the order referred to is some years older than the city of Prince Rupert, and a special order was made in 1915 in favor of this city. Why, at this time of day, is one of Prince Rupert's privileges to be taken away?

Mr. Clements tried to show that it was an international question, but this fell flat when Mr. Clayton asked if the United States authorities had complained. In the long run, he had to admit that a private concern had drawn the attention of Ottawa to the matter. Evidently, it is another case of Vancouver v. Prince Rupert, with the odds largely in favor of the south. There seems to be a great fear somewhere that this city will ever become prosperous.

It is clear that Ottawa knew of the old order-in-council when it permitted fish to be shipped south in bond, but it did not make a move for fifteen months, during which time several American firms came here and started doing business. It is also clear that the slight alteration made in permitting fish to be sent by steamer to Vancouver and thence per rail is a contravention of the ancient order-in-council. If such a change could be made, why could the whole order not be rescinded? The answer is that some private interest in Vancouver has a stronger pull at Ottawa than the city of Prince Rupert has.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

So the election is to be on September 14th. How sorry Bowser must be to have to make the announcement.

By September 14th, Hon. William Manson will have held a portfolio for a longer spell than he ever has done. Well, he will be relieved of it then. So far as the government is concerned, the election might as well have been fixed for the 13th.

The next big news from the eastern front will be the taking of Lemberg.

Sir Douglas Haig and General Joffre are evidently content to pursue the advance in easy stages.

The despatches seem meagre but each little episode reported means much more than the wording of the despatch signifies. A gain of a mile seems little in view of the terrific Russian advance, but it
