BRITAIN'S ANSWER SPLENDIDLY GIVEN

"Britain Prepared" drew a well-filled house at the Westholme Theatre last evening and that everyone was thrilled by Britain's magnificent answer to the question "Is Britain Prepared?" was evident from the way in which the audience sang the National Anthem at the close. The pictures were just exactly what is claimed for them, a complete and final answer to the question, while at the same time they provide one of the finest "movie" shows imaginable.

The first five reels dealt with the making and drilling of Kitchener's army, from the first raw recruit to the sending off to the front of a division. The final review of this division on Salisbury Plain makes one of the most striking pictures of the series, with tier upon tier of gleaming bayonets as far as the eye can see.

The viewing at close quarters of such reversions to ancient times as the catapult proved highly interesting, while the making of munitions was followed in every detail. Time after time, the audience cheered lustily at some fresh evidence of the way in which the British people buckle to their work of defeating the Hun.

The last five reels deal with the navy and undoubtedly they are the finest of the series. The building and launching of a dreadnought are shown and then you are taken out to the fleet and you visit each battleship of the line, making personal acquaintance with Sir John Jellicoe and his bull-dog on board the "Iron Duke," though Sir John is rather shy of the camera. The mine-sweepers are shown at close range in a North Sea storm; you go down in a submarine and view the fleet through the periscope; you go round the fleet in a destroyer and get splendid views of the "horns" in rough weather, with the seas dashing over their bows.

And finally you see every detail of the "Queen Lizzie" down to the ship's mascot. The closing scenes of this great dreadnought by moonlight are very impressive and the audience broke into a great cheer last night as a little "powder-monkey" emerged from the mouth of one of her big guns and gave the final answer, "All's Well." It is something not to be missed and ever to be remembered.

A most pleasing feature of the show was the music furnished by H. A. Harvey and P. C. Daugherty. While the audience gathered, they gave splendid renderings of "Brahm's Dance," the intermezzo from "Cavalliera Rusticana," Morrison's "Meditation," and then a great patriotic overture.
