THE WAR

The Somme offensive goes along steadily, with the French making progress one day, the British the next and the Canadians the next. The reports are meagre, giving only the bare facts, but they speak volumes for the efficiency of the Allied artillery and the valor of our infantry. Nearly sixty thousand prisoners have been captured since Dominion Day when the great offensive had its birth, and many guns have also been taken. All along the western front, the enemy is on the defensive with a gradually backward movement. Before winter sets in, it is possible that the whole of the north of France may be in the hands of the Allies. The Verdun attack by the enemy has given place to defensive warfare, with the French trying to break through in a great effort to drive the Germans out of a very valuable mineral country from which the enemy is drawing much material for making steel.

On the eastern front, the Russians are steadily gaining in their campaign in the Carpathians, and, from reports emanating from the Hungarian parliament, the situation in that country is acute and an invasion by the Russians and Rumanians is looked forward to with dread.

The Italians have resumed their drive for Trieste and the Austrians are again retreating. The taking of this important port will give entire Italian control of the head of the Adriatic and a most important point made towards ultimate victory.

On the Balkan front, the big offensive has begun in earnest and the latest reports indicate that the Serbians, French and British are steadily driving the Bulgarians and Germans northwards. The armies of the Central Powers in the Balkans will be subjected to a big squeeze and they will have great difficulty in escaping being crushed between the Russians and Rumanians in the north and the Allied armies to the south.

What Greece is doing, or will do, is not taken seriously. The Allies are pursuing their way practically unconcerned as to the decision of King Constantine. The king says that the Greek nation will come in at the opportune moment. The opportune moment for Constantine is long since gone and the Greek nation, and the nation alone, will receive proper consideration. There are many Greeks already serving with the Allies and public sentiment is largely against the king and his Teutonic Consort.

It begins to look as if Lord Kitchener's original estimate of the war is to be realized and that it will probably end next August. Germany is reported to be considering important changes, involving great sacrifices, which probably means a general shortening of their fronts by drawing in towards their centre. Under existing conditions, it is hard to see how such a movement could be carried out without bringing disaster to the retreating armies, if the Allied transportation facilities are at all on an equality with those of the enemy. The next three weeks should bring along important developments on all fronts.

SPLENDID ADDRESS BY

people. He said that the French soldiers had a different attitude towards the war than those of their allies, the reason being that the war had been carried into the heart of France, and that the men in the trenches felt strongly that they were defending their wives, sisters and mothers, who were not many miles in the rear.

The British troops gave the necessary back-bone to the western line which brought about the first great German reverse at the Marne, while later the colonial troops had done magnificent work, especially at Ypres and St. Julien.

He also dwelt upon the splendid spirit which filled the people of Britain, there being many thousands of women producing shells and other munitions while many more did splendid service in hospitals and convalescent homes.

He said it was impossible to tell when the war would be over but one great fact was certain—victory was for the Allies. He also described vividly the work of the Red Cross Society and that of the Army Medical Corps, explaining that the wounded were as carefully looked after as they would be at home. He told of the work done in the McGill Hospital at Boulogne where he saw 600 wounded men arrive in one day, all cheerful, though suffering pain. Of 21,000 cases handled here only 2 per cent. died. After describing the equipment of the hospital ships, on which everything was done to alleviate suffering, he gave a touching description of the cemetery at Etapelle, where each grave is carefully tended no matter though it may be that of a nameless soldier.

Sir George also gave a splendid account of his visit to the cruiser squadron of Admiral Beatty and the Grand Fleet of Sir John Jellicoe, in which he told of the cares and anxieties of the men who keep constant watch on the North Sea.

war, he pointed out that there would be many thousands of men brought back to Canada after the war, and that the moment peace is declared there will be thousands more who are now making munitions, thrown out of employment. He emphasized the fact that we must now prepare for peace. The war found us unready and we must take care that peace does not find us in the same dangerous position. He warned his audience that the selling of a corner lot at an advanced price did not produce anything and was therefore no gain to the country. Speculation must give place to production and the people of Canada must show closer co-operation and more team work. He described speculation as piracy.

Labor and capital must realize that, instead of being opposed to each other, they are inter-dependent one on the other. Separately they could do nothing. The one great factor between the two was vision or brains. This quality was necessary to bring the two into action and each was entitled to its share in the resultant gain.

In dealing with Prince Rupert, he pointed out that the fact that the city has a great harbor and railroad means nothing unless there is production. There can be no trade unless there are the goods to be traded and the first duty of British Columbia is to produce and to keep on producing.

On resuming his seat Sir George was given a tremendous ovation. T. D. Pattullo, M. L. A. for Prince Rupert, proposed a hearty vote of thanks to the speaker, which was seconded by William Manson and carried enthusiastically.

Prince Rupert, it is expected, will return its usual contribution to the British Red Cross Day. This year the method of raising the fund will be from the sale of refreshments and by raffles at the fair.
