DIED WITH RESCUER CLOSE BESIDE HIM

Seward, Alaska, Sept. 26.—While crossing Portage Glacier from Turnagain Arm to Portage Bay, a resident of Hope, Bert Foreman, fell into a crevasse and alighted in water and mud out of sight of Eaton, who had become separated a short distance from his companion on account of a snowstorm. Eaton began a search on hearing Foreman's cries for help. He told Foreman that he would enter the crevasse lower down and rescue him. While Eaton was gone Foreman became panic stricken and opened the arteries in his left wrist. Eaton reached him just before he died. Foreman said he feared he would freeze to death and chose an easier way to die. The body was carried out to Mile Sixty-three of the United States Railroad and will be brought here.

WRINCH GROUP AT OWEN LAKE BONDED

An important deal was made by Harris Bros. this week when they bonded for $35,000 the Wrinch group of claims at Owen Lake to a syndicate headed by F. H. Daken and Moore of San Francisco and New York. The property was staked some years ago by Gore and Risdale and then Dr. Wrinch took an interest.

The property is in the Owen Lake district and is reached by a sixteen-mile trail from Houston and that trail is now being put in shape.

Five men went up to the property this week to work on the trail and to erect cabins and the intention of the new owners is to develop the property as quickly as possible.

The group is very promising with four known veins that average four feet in width. The ore, which is copper and lead-zinc, is high grade.—Omineca Herald.
