CHANGED TUNE

Nothing could be more illuminating as to the course which the war is taking than the speech made recently in the Reichstag by Count Von Bethmann-Hollwegg, the German Imperial Chancellor. In September, 1914, this gentleman and his kind treated Britain and her "contemptible little army" with disdain, but in September, 1916, Britain is hailed as Germany's "most egotistical, fiercest, most obstinate" enemy. This, from such a quarter, is flattery indeed. The last adjective of the chancellor is perhaps the one which contains the most truth. British obstinacy has played a most important part in the war, as it has done in every war in which Britain has ever been engaged. Britain never acknowledges defeat, no matter how black things may be for the moment. The South African war was the greatest triumph which British obstinacy ever won, up to August, 1914.

The most important part of the Chancellor's speech, however, is that which deals with the two most important battle fronts. Two years ago; one year ago, Germany talked of nothing but victory. She boasted of the vast territorial advantages she had gained and set to work to rule the conquered territory as if it were to be hers forever. Today, Von Bethmann-Hollwegg is content to make an effort to keep up waning German courage by the assertion that the Allies will never be able to break through the German lines on the Somme and on the eastern front.

There is no further big talk of victory, but simply an attempt to induce the German people to believe that their armies cannot be defeated; talk which is the most certain augury that the German armies are already morally defeated.

That physical defeat is just as certain, it is impossible for the German minister to hide from the thinking element amongst his fellow-countrymen. It may be technically true that the German line on the Somme front has not been broken, but it has been so badly twisted and bent that it cannot for many more weeks present an effective front to the Allies, unless it is drawn back for many miles and reformed on a smaller and more compact basis. On the eastern front, the line again may be said to remain unbroken, but it has been swept back by the Russians practically at will, and over four hundred thousand prisoners have been taken, leaving the Austro-German army on that front a mere skeleton compared to its former strength. Taking it all through, the speech of the German Chancellor is the speech of a minister who knows that his armies are fighting a losing battle and that the end is only a matter of time.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

King Constantine evidently still thinks that there is lots of time to waste in trying to make the best bargain he can with the Allies. There are a few cruisers in the Aegean Sea which will be quite capable of showing him otherwise. So far as the Greek royal family is concerned, the time for driving a bargain passed many months ago.

Sir Thomas White has been invited to London by the Imperial Government. Sir Sam Hughes will have to look to his laurels if the Finance Minister is to be allowed to poach on his special preserves.

That note which President Wilson sent to the president of the Truth Society was decidedly more pointed than anything he sent to Berlin. Woodrow is getting quite warlike.

from under the feet of its officers, as it were, the easiest job in the world. Constantine will have to put his fleet under lock and key if there are many more civilians prowling around.

A little better than one German aeroplane a minute must be a record even for such a daring and accomplished aviator as Lieut. Gueynemer.

The Bremen mystery deepens. She is reported safely in Falmouth harbor; a life-belt bearing her name has been picked up off the coast of Maine, and the Germans claim that she is safely in an American port.

MINING NOTES

One week's clean-up at Lorne Creek was $950. There will be one more small clean-up before bedrock is reached.

A pack train of 22 horses arrived from the north last week, is now packing supplies into the Legate Creek properties, where development will be carried on all winter.

C. H. Sproat of Portland, who is connected with the Hood River Apple Growers Assn., has bonded a silver-lead property at Evelyn, four miles from the railway. A. G. Garde, of Rupert, will start a crew of a dozen men to work on it early in October.

Messrs. Seebur, Shoemaker & Golding who have been operating on Gold Creek expect to clean-up within the next 30 days.

Dr. A. K. Higgs, a well known eye specialist, W. B. Donahue, a builder, and W. C. Repass, broker, all of Portland, have taken a bond on the Kitselas Mountain Copper Company's property.

Mr. and Mrs. Snodgrass left Usk for Portland this week for the winter. Mr. Snodgrass has done a lot of work this season and hopes to get machinery on the property in the spring.

W. B. Donahue returned to Usk this week after a trip to the Hudson Bay Mountain.

R. P. Trimble, Telkwa, made a trip up Copper river with Wells, of Usk. They brought back a sample of native copper and they report having traced the lead for three miles.—Omineca Herald.

PAULINE FREDERICK AT THE MAJESTIC THEATRE

Pauline Frederick is the Famous Players' star at the Majestic on Monday and Tuesday in "Audrey," a five-act adaptation of Mary Johnson's celebrated novel and play. Miss Frederick declares that Audrey is the part she has enjoyed playing above all her other triumphs. Audrey is a simple, unsophisticated child of the woods who has been rescued from the Indians when a child, and made the household drudge of a hypocritical minister and his wife. When Lord Haward, her guardian, begins to pay her attention, she is denounced from the pulpit and nearly drowned by an angry mob which believes her to be a witch. It is a story full of action and intense interest and should be as successful on the screen as it was as a novel and as a play. An Eclair Weekly completes a splendid show.
