DEATH CONQUERED

All that our wonderful dead relinquish they bequeath to us; and, when they die for us, they leaves us their lives, not in any strained, metaphorical sense, but in a very real and direct way. Virtue goes out of every man who falls while performing a deed of glory; and that virtue drops down upon us; and nothing of him is lost and nothing evaporates in the shock of a premature end. He gives us in one solitary and mighty stroke what he would have given us in a long life of duty and love. Death does not injure life; it is powerless against it. Life's aggregate never changes. What death takes from those who fall enters into those who are left standing. The number of lamps grows less, but the flame rises higher. Death is in no wise the gainer so long as there are living men. The more it exercises its ravages, the more it increases the intensity of that which it cannot touch; the more it pursues its phantom victories, the better does it prove to us that man will end by conquering death.—Maurice Maeterlinck in "The Wrack of the Storm."

REPLACING THE BAR

On Sunday evening, Rev. Dr. Grant opened up a very important subject and one which should engage the earnest attention of every citizen of Prince Rupert, namely—what is to replace the bar when prohibition comes into force?

To very many men, particularly those who are away from town for weeks and months at a time, the bar has become a sort of club. It is frequented by many men who are not hard drinkers, but who simply have got into the habit of meeting with old friends in this way. Reformers have said a great deal about the demon drink, but there is no doubt that the average man who is in the habit of frequenting the bar does not do so because he is driven by a craving for liquor, but simply that he has met a friend whom he wishes to entertain, and his habit of casual entertainment runs along that line.

Something to take the place of the bar must be provided, in fact, will provide itself, simply because the demand for some such place will remain, and wherever there is a demand for anything there is some sort of a supply forthcoming. There is, of course, the story of the wife who had a drunken husband who failed to respond to all treatment and when the minister asked her if she had tried everything, she replied, "Yes, even to putting sawdust on the floor and a barrel marked XXX in the corner, but it was of no use." The substitute for the bar need not resemble a bar-room, nor must it show any sign of being an effort to reclaim the former frequenter from his old habits. It must be something which the fisherman, the miner, and the man from outside the city will drop into naturally, and, once having been there, will go back in the natural order of things.

The average man, and we are all average men, hates to feel that someone is trying to reform him. It must be an unconscious changing of the old habits for new, resulting from an appreciation of the fact that the new plan is better than the old. With the bar gone, men will look around for some place of entertainment.

Killing the Calves

—All sorts of excuses are offered for the high price of beef, the most plausible being the alleged demand for veal—"the killing of calves which should be allowed to grow into regular beef." You cannot have beef if you eat it as "veal," but you can have Shredded Wheat Biscuit which contains more real nutriment than beef and costs much less. Shredded wheat biscuit is the whole wheat steam-cooked, shredded and baked. Make it your "meat" for ten days and see how much better you feel. Wholesome and strengthening for any meal with milk or cream or in combination with fruits.

We already have billiard rooms, picture shows, etc., which will undoubtedly benefit from the fact that the bar is gone and will be found by many to be a good substitute, but there will arise a need for more "homey" quarters in which a visitor and his friends might meet and spend a few hours resting and talking over old times. It is early yet to lay any definite plans, but it is not too early to begin thinking things over and preparing for the future. Dr. Grant has had a wide experience of men and is well fitted to assist in making arrangements along this line, and it would be a splendid thing if citizens could get together and talk things over. When the bar is taken away, something must take its place.
