GREECE

The truth about the Greek situation is coming out gradually, and it becomes apparent that Constantine is still, as he always has been, a Teutonic sympathizer. It may be that the Allies have been slow in bringing pressure to bear upon the Royalists in Greece, yet had they not practically taken possession of Saloniki at the outset of the Balkan trouble, the situation today would have been much more grave. There is no doubt that the Allied occupation of Saloniki was an important factor in the "benevolent neutrality" of the Greek monarch, but it is equally certain that fear of Venizelos and his democrats was a still more important factor. Had Constantine been certain of an united Royalist Greece, he would have joined the Bulgarians and Turks long ago.

The Allies long since sensed the true meaning of the situation and their repeated demands for more and still more concessions were simply a continued effort to bring Constantine to the scratch. He yielded one point, and a greater was demanded immediately, until the crisis was reached, when the Greek King had to surrender all to the Allies or fight. The whole round of Greek diplomacy has been typically Teutonic in its efforts to stall off the day when the Allied armies in Greece would be free to advance to the north to drive out the Germans, Bulgarians and Turks. The advance on Monastir was merely a preliminary movement to occupy a portion of the army until such time as the Greek situation was finally cleared up and done with. The crisis has arrived, and the Allies are ready. That they will act promptly and effectively is certain. The time for delaying and compromise is long since gone and determined action on the part of General Sarrail and Admiral Du Fournet is the only solution of the difficulty. The Venizelists will probably to a man join the Allies and the Royalists should not present any great obstacle. The Allies have the whole winter before them to make a complete job, as there is little likelihood of any big advance north being made before spring. With Athens, Piraeus and Katerina in Allied hands, and Constantine and his supporters in safe keeping until the end of the war, the French, Serbian, Italian and British armies will be ready to sweep north to oust Von Mackenzen and his army from Rumania.

By spring, the demand for German reinforcements on the western and Galician fronts will have become so insistent that Mackenzen will receive little assistance from these quarters and he will find that his new and extended battle-line is a weakness which will prove his undoing. Germany and Austria are hard put to it now to keep the various divisions up to fighting strength and the Belgian garrisons have been largely depleted to fill the ranks on the various fronts. There is no longer a vast reserve to draw upon. An appearance of strength has been kept up by queuing the German army figures as so many divisions, but military experts who have gone fully into the situation state that a German army division is no longer what it was and that they have been reduced in size by as much as twenty per cent during the last few months. The Balkan situation was brought about by Germany in order to spread the small armies of the Allies, but next spring the shoe will be on the other foot and Germany will have a big struggle to keep her armies intact for any length of time over such a wide area. The beginning of the final titanic struggle has come with the definite stand taken by the Greek King. It can have but one ending.

Also delicious with bananas or other fruits. Made in Canada.

GYMNASIUM IS NOW IN FULL SWING

The Railwaymen's Club have got their gymnasium on Second Avenue into good working order and three nights a week there is a class of enthusiastic young gymnasts drilling on the horizontal bars, etc. The "gym" is open every Monday and Thursday and all young men are given a hearty welcome. On Fridays, the boys of the Presbyterian Club have the use of the apparatus. The Railwaymen's Hall gives splendid scope for all kinds of physical exercises and the equipment which has been fitted up provides a long-felt want in the city.

The Royal Standard Test
Here's where we test the choicest samples of Canada's six million acre wheat crop. We grind them into flour in the little mill you see on the left of the picture. Then comes the supreme test—bread-baking. If the bread is perfect in every way we pronounce the wheat A1 and the flour—ROYAL STANDARD.
