SERVICE

After hearing Colonel Guthrie's magnificent speech on the war, one is impressed more strongly than ever of the necessity for National Service throughout Canada and the Empire. In the light of the facts brought out by this returned officer, it is apparent that, up to the present, in spite of all the magnificent efforts that have been put forth, Canada has been only playing at war. Canada has done much, but what has been done only goes to show how much remains to be accomplished. There is no call to give way to pessimism, but there is an instant demand for the husbanding of every dollar; of every resource, and the energy of every unit of Canada's manpower.

Enlistment for overseas service is a matter for each man to consider and decide upon according to the dictates of his own conscience, but there are many thousands of men throughout Canada who feel impelled to go, but who are held here by ties which they feel in duty bound not to break. If the National Service Board works along the right lines, it may solve many such problems and release for war service, thousands who are at present anxious but undecided as to their line of action.

What Canada needs today is a Lloyd George who will get down to business and put the whole Dominion on a war footing, not forgetting the enemy aliens in our midst, who would welcome the overthrow of Canada and the British Empire, and there are such still at large and enjoying the freedom of Canadian institutions. Canada needs a war council of men entirely outside of politics, and, above all things, the Dominion needs a leader. Drastic action is imperative and it must be instant action. The only solution seems to be the appointing of a war council outside of politics entirely, leaving the two parties to conduct the internal affairs of the Dominion as of old. The old methods have ended in chaos and wasted millions, and the situation calls for men of the Lloyd George stamp who will forget tradition and precedent, and who will handle the situation along similar lines to those about to be adopted in Britain. It is a crime that one man should have to lay down his life on the firing line, while another of the same race stays at home and makes millions out of the disaster which led to the death of his fellow.

A LOFTY MESSAGE

Sir Wilfrid Laurier's speech of last week, though intended primarily for his own constituency, has a message for the whole of Canada. It is a measure of his national significance that this should be so. He was addressing men of his own blood and faith. He has since the beginning of the war been the target for bitter abuse upon sectional grounds. Yet no trace of retaliation in kind occurred in his words, and his appeal would have had equal force whether heard in Halifax or Vancouver, instead of Quebec. In language of the loftiest simplicity he made his plea, as he said himself, not to any cold sense of necessity, but to the hearts of his hearers. He asked the young men to go and fight, not as an obligation, although the obligation exists, but for love of justice and liberty.

England, he showed, is herself fighting for others. Canada is not now fighting for either herself or England so much as for Christian civilization, menaced by Germany.

He pointed out that even after raising an army of four million men, as well as keeping the seas, England is now passing through a political crisis because she feels that she has not done enough. Canada's duty in the face of this is plain and inescapable. And Quebec, of all the provinces, has the best of reasons to admire British institutions, and to fight for their maintenance.—Vancouver Province.
