the battles of Canada were being fought out in Europe just as surely as if they were fighting on the Pacific coast. "If Canada is worth living in, Canada is worth fighting for," urged the speaker.
He also criticised our immigration policy, pointing out that too many men who had none but a purely selfish interest in Canada had been brought here. He favored the idea of Canada for the Canadians and thought that a much more careful sifting of our immigrants should be made in future. Lieut. Gordon said he believed in freedom for all men, but he did not believe that it was fair that, at this time, Austrians and Germans should be employed in hundreds along this coast at $4 and $5 per day while our boys fought in the trenches. He thought that a heavy tax should be put upon their earnings and the proceeds devoted to the welfare of our soldiers' dependents.
After making a strong appeal for every available man to join the colors, he paid a compliment to the ladies of Prince Rupert for the way in which they had assisted the returned soldiers in furnishing their quarters.

Sergt.-Major Matier gave a short address in which he told of some of his experiences in India, Egypt, Turkey, Greece, France and Britain. He had been sent to Vancouver by the Indian government in connection with the Komagata Maru trouble, and, later, in Marseilles, he found some of the Hindus from Vancouver making their way to Germany.
He firmly believed that the whole scheme was of German origin.

The High School Glee Club rendered patriotic songs during the evening, the Marseillaise being rendered in French. The accompaniments were played by Miss Marguerite Kilpatrick.

At the close, Lieut. Gordon showed some pictures from the front, but was unable to give the whole series as the movie machine was out of order. A collection was taken on behalf of the soldiers' fund in Vancouver.
