AFTER THE WAR

Vast fortunes have been made in Canada out of war contracts. Not much of this wealth has come to British Columbia, and so what we are about to say has very little local application. Is it right that these fortunes should remain exempt from any obligation to those who return home when the war is over? Put yourself in the place of the man who has spent months and perhaps years in the trenches. You return home and find scores of men who have become rich in making material that you have used in the war. How would you regard them? Would it occur to you that a part, at least, of these war fortunes ought to be employed in some way for your benefit? Think it over. We can tell you that the soldiers are thinking about it.

What are private individuals doing in British Columbia in providing for the returned soldiers who will require work at good wages, and who will be entitled to it, if any men ever were? We have a province teeming with natural resources. Grant that it might be premature to inaugurate industries on a large scale pending the return of the troops, has anything been done preliminary to the establishment of the industries that we all know will be needed? Plenty of resolutions have been passed. The people of the province are adepts at shouldering their responsibilities on to other people, and preferably on to the government, but that sort of thing does not take us anywhere. We talk, for example, of the great iron industry that can and ought to be built up here, and we are unanimous that the government, some government, any government, should do something about it. In the progress of the many discussions of this question we have heard the responsibility for inaction thrown upon the provincial government, the Dominion government, and even upon the Imperial government. We are told that there is going to be an opening for trade in Siberia and Russia, but so far not a single step has been taken to find out what that market will take. We mean that nothing has been done by private enterprise. The Dominion government may have done something, but we are not very sure about it. But we take very little stock in government trade inquiries. They usually result in very little, whereas private inquiries, that is, inquiries carried on at the expense of business men, are likely to result in business.

One might enlarge on this subject for columns, but we shall drop it at this point, for all we wish to do is to arouse public opinion to an appreciation of the very great importance of the problem that will be presented by the requirements of the men who return sound and well from the war. The needs of some of them can be met by getting the men out upon the land, but let no one deceive himself with the idea that even twenty-five per cent of the men who will return from the war will desire to engage in farming. The solution of the problem will depend upon what private individuals do, and it is by no means too soon to plan for what will surely happen, and happen perhaps much sooner than we expect.—Colonist.

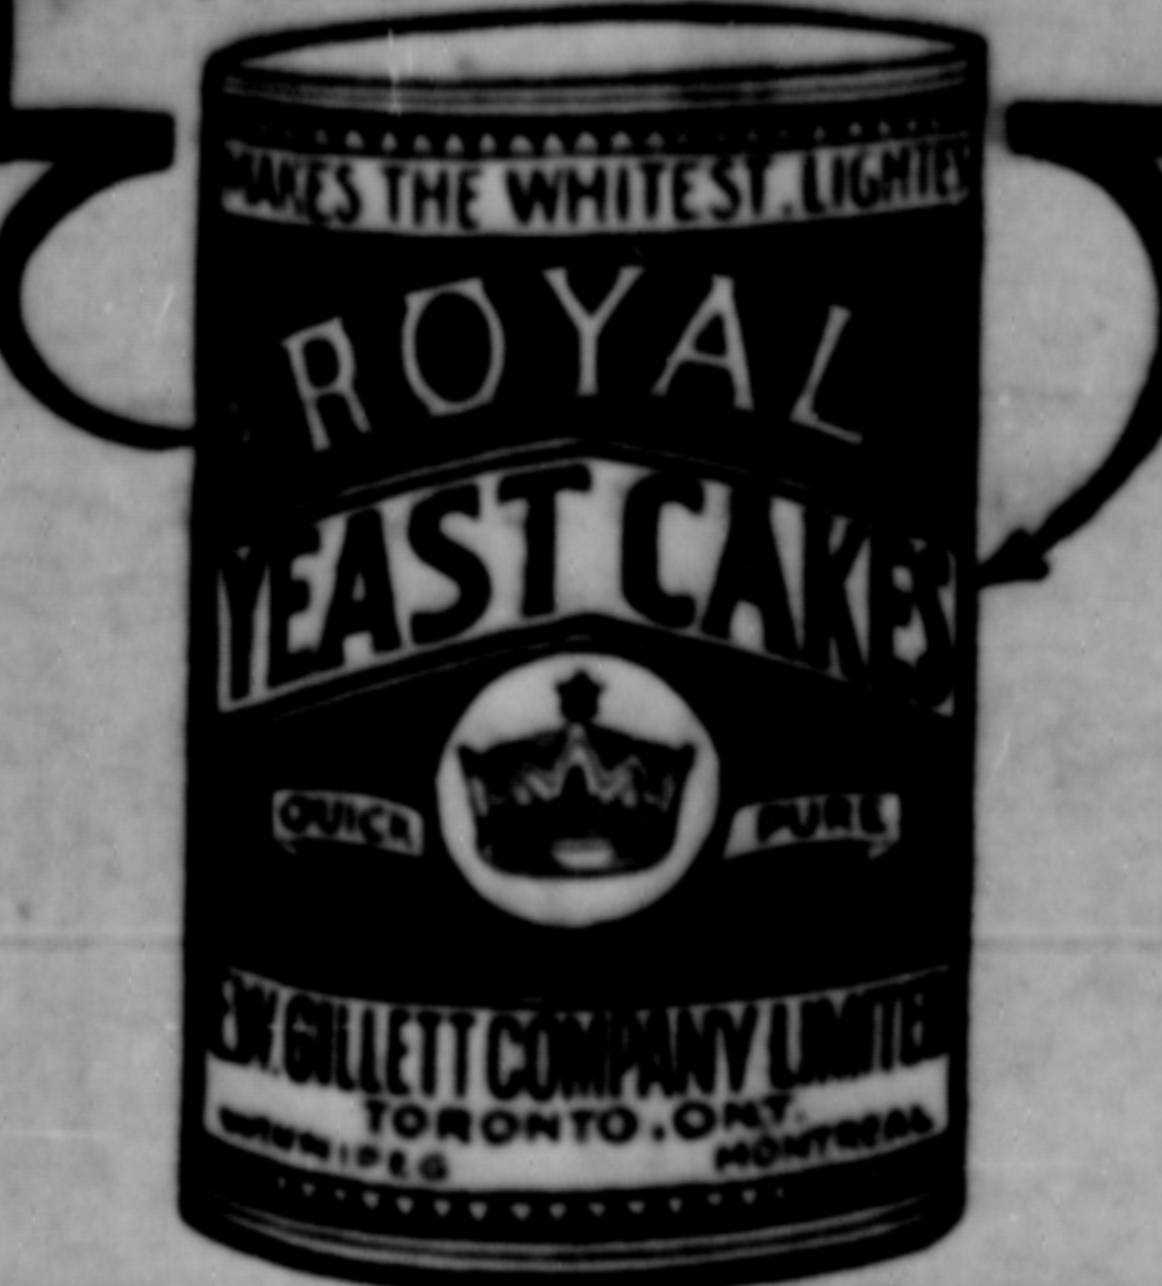

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Germany's new submarine policy proclaims her ambition for world domination. Neutral nations which fail to protest must recognize her authority over them if she wins the war.

Herr Rathmeister, some weeks ago expressed the opinion that the accentuated submarine campaign would starve Great Britain into submission within twelve weeks. Not to put too fine a point upon it, that seems to be another Hun miscalculation. How many "frightful" expedients have been resorted to since the war began that were going to speedily reduce Britain to a state of impotence? The Zeppelin preceded the submarine, and it was not the first.

Our ancestors in the good old days before Queen Bess were not much disturbed by the high cost of living, or, if they were, their worries were limited. The price of such things as potatoes, sugar, tobacco, peaches, oranges, apricots, lemons, bananas, Indian corn, tea and coffee, not to speak of such things as turkeys, did not trouble them at all, for the very simple reason that they did not have any of these things. If we would get back to the simple menus of these ancestors the H. C. of L. would not be much inconvenience.

The position of the recently appointed Austrian ambassador to the United States is a very peculiar one. The Allies granted him safe conduct to the United States and he arrived in that country at the time the president had broken off diplomatic relations with Germany. He did not present his credentials, doubtless because he learned that they would not have been received until the attitude of Austria towards the submarine campaign had been defined. This has not yet been done, and the likelihood is that it will not be in a manner satisfactory to the United States, in which event diplomatic relations with the Dual Monarchy will be broken off. The ambassador-designate will have no official status whatever, and the problem of getting him home will be not the least serious of those he will have to face.
