line and Old Bulgarian churches; and he persistently urges the Synod to grant more money so that the church may be outwardly still more imposing. He has a voice of thunder and his gestures suggest fate. When he takes off his gemmed mitre and his cloth-of-gold surplice, he behaves like a hustling politician.

Has High Place At Court.

Pitirim's rank as Metropolitan gives him free access to the court and his talents as politician have made him a court adviser. Since the change in the army command he has been a good friend of the Czar; with the Czarina he has supplanted as spiritual counsellor the once all-powerful Father Yanushkevich; and his opinion on all questions is taken.

Pitirim's political aims are far-reaching. First of them is to make peace. His motives in making peace are desire for power, general humanitarianism, and an intense dislike of Catholicism. He declares that if peace is made at the present stage Germany will succeed in her aim of detaching Poland from Russia, and without the Catholic Poles, he urges, Russia will gain more than she loses.

Pitirim's ultimate aim is to convert Russia into a theocracy with the church on top. He represents mediaeval ideas, and against him is the modern spirit, so he ought to fail. But Pitirim's opponents, who represent the modern spirit, are mostly men of no political capacity, whereas Pitirim runs his mediaeval ideas with the most approved methods. If peace comes this year and no revolution follows, Pitirim will be Russia's real ruler, and the world witness experiments in government and social organizations of which it never dreamed.—Byron Lomax.

POISON PLOT AGAINST PREMIER LLOYD GEORGE

engaged at the time of their arrest was to put poison on darts and shoot them with an air gun at Mr. Lloyd George at Walton Heath. According to the evidence put in, any person dying from "curare" died in great agony. It was harmless if taken in the mouth, but fatal if injected. In summing up the case, the attorney-general said he did not think he exaggerated when he said at the opening of the case that they were dealing here with a gang of desperate persons poisoned by these revolutionary productions, (referring to the Labor and Socialistic literature found in their possession) with a complete and unreasoning contempt for their own country.
