THE WAR

The latest information coming from the various fronts show that little by little, on many fronts, the enemies of the Entente nations are being driven back. At no one point are they able to make any permanent progress. On the British and the French fronts in the west, while no great territorities have been captured during the last few days, at several distinct points, propress has been made, a few yards at a time, but always at the expense of the enemy. The German General Staff have thrown reserves into the front line in despairing efforts to stem the pressure exerted by the Allies, and at times have attempted a counter offensive over a wide front, but it has been unable to move the Allied Notwithstanding the transfer of thousands of his troops from the eastern theatre to the west, Hindenburg has seen the Allies "nibble" at his "line," reinforced as it is. The Allies have now got the upper hand, and Hindenburg knows it. His great problem seems now to be to get his armies back to the Rhine, without losing them. He is losing them too fast as it is, in cusualties.
