THE NATION IN ARMS

Conscription is a word of sinister import to Anglo-Saxon democracies. War and peace, as a great French writer says, still move outside the law of democracy. The evolution of democracy not yet being complete in the English-speaking countries, there is an inherent distrust of militarism as a force invariably hostile to democratic freedom. It was this active distrust of militarism that made conscription impossible in England in the early days of the war. It was this distrust that hampered the French nation in its task of army reform before war broke out, and in overwhelming numbers drove the smaller Allied armies across the Marne. It was this distrust that, in Canada, made it inexpedient heretofore to adopt it until the voluntary system had been given a fair trial. In this country, unfortunately, voluntary recruiting was never organized as Lord Derby organized it in Great Britain. Voluntary recruiting in Canada is as dead as Julius Caesar. It is too late to amend the past. The ravages of war have rendered obsolete principles of national service that passed muster a year ago. There is but one course now to pursue if the honor of Canada is to be preserved. Until the war is ended Canada must be a nation in arms. Those who will not volunteer must be made to serve. The fighting divisions of Canada must be reinforced by Canadians.

Militarism as a weapon which democracy can wield in its own defence is not to be confounded with the military systems that are employed to buttress the citadels of feudal tyranny and autocratic rule. Military service, when democratized and nationalized, entrenches democracy in the citadel of government. Its fundamental characteristic is that of an army of defence. It defends the liberties of the nation and aids in the maintenance of international peace. For the Allied nations this is a war of defence—the defence of national independence against the imperial ambitions of Germany, and the defence of international peace. It is a conflict between democratic nations and a military autocracy. Militarism in the hands of democracy is the only weapon by which the liberties of the world may be maintained against the aggressions of the Teuton Empires. Militarism is a menace, as it proved to be in Russia, and it is to this day in Germany, when it is the weapon of a tyrannical caste for the subjugation of democracy at home and for the conquest of territory abroad. The only security for democracy in a world at war is to be a nation in arms. This war gives a death blow to the militarism of the past. Democracy is fighting to end war. The force of the civil tradition in national life is not weakened, but strengthened when the military defences rest on the broad foundations of a citizen army.

The unit of Imperial efficiency is the nation. What Canada may yet accomplish in the reinforcing of her army at the front and in organizing for war service at home must be done as a nation, and done quickly. The failure of the Government to put the Militia Act into force when recruiting fell away is the cause of the present demand for compulsory enlistment. The Premier cannot be unaware of the feeling of irritation and disquiet throughout the Dominion owing to the failure of his Government to grapple with the serious problems of this war. To the grievances of the returned soldiers is now added the dangerous menace of racial discord and civil strife, which has been stirred up by cowardly and indefensible assaults upon the liberties of foreign settlers who came to this country, at the invitation of the Canadian authorities, to people and till the soil, and to help in building up the wealth and prosperity of the community. The highest duty of the statesman in these perilous days of war is to unite the country, to organize all its resources for the carrying on of the campaign in Europe, and to stamp out with ruthless tread any attempt to fan the flames of racial animosity. Above all, the Premier owes it to the men who are facing death in France, to those who come back maimed and broken in health, and to the gallant soldiers who sleep on foreign soil, to see that the khaki line of battle on the Canadian front is maintained at strength, and that the honor of the nation in his war is fully upheld.

the army so that girls in the next few years should not have to pick their husbands from the old and enfeebled. It would be better to draw upon married men, she thought, and support their dependents than be faced with the prospects of a far inferior generation. This would be taking care of posterity all right, but as has been remarked somewhere else, "what has posterity done for us?"

The warlike feeling in the Scandinavian countries is growing fast against the Germans. An agreement of neutrality was made between the three countries of Norway, Sweden and Denmark during the first year of the war, and if the three countries involved go to war, they will in all probability go to war together. Of the three, Denmark is in the most exposed position for the application of German frightfulness and, doubtless, Germany would like to have some excuse for overrunning this little state, whose supplies of foodstuffs would be very welcome.
