The water at the salt lake for the last few evenings has been in the pink of condition for swimming and many enthusiasts took advantage of the fact. A party over on Tuesday had an unexpected pleasure while passing through the narrows at the entrance to the lake. A deer had apparently crossed at low tide and when it returned the water had risen and it had to swim across. It crossed only a short distance in front of the launch and when it had reached the opposite shore hastily scampered into the brush, but it remained long enough to give everyone in the boat a fairly close view of it.
