THAT CAMP KITCHEN

On Monday night, George Morrow, representing a citizens' committee, placed the matter of purchasing a camp kitchen before the city council. He reminded the members that, when the boys left, there was a distinct promise made that something along this line would be done. From the discussion which took place, it is fairly evident that, under existing financial conditions, the council feels indisposed to do anything in the matter. One member thought the idea of giving them a camp kitchen was absurd, and that the gift should take some other form; another thought that the government should provide all outfit for the soldiers, while all were satisfied that, as arrangements had been made for taking care only of city contingencies, and the bank was very anxious that no money should be expended except where absolutely necessary, it would be impossible to make any promise.

The statements made were all true, in their way, but they did not dispose of the fact that nothing has been done for the boys of the second contingent, while the first contingent received $2,000 from the city. Financial conditions were substantially the same, when both contingents left, but in the case of the first, excitement ran high, as was perfectly natural, and the city formed something of a precedent, without thinking of the results. There is no denying the urgent need for economy, but there is also no getting away from the fact that the citizens, if not the council, made a promise which should be fulfilled. The boys of the second are just as much thought of as those of the first, but, since they left, public feeling has become more normal and the war is no longer something new.

Whether the council does anything or not, it is almost certain that the camp kitchen promised will be purchased by the citizens, but it seems hard that those who have so willingly done their share in the way of subscribing to the various funds should be called upon to get together the necessary $600, when the council, by exercising a little foresight, might have spread the cost over the property holders of the city, whose property is being protected by our soldiers, even if they are so many miles away. Something like 70 per cent of Prince Rupert's property holders are spread over Europe, California, and the east, and it seems but fair that they should be asked to contribute their mite towards the comfort of Prince Rupert boys

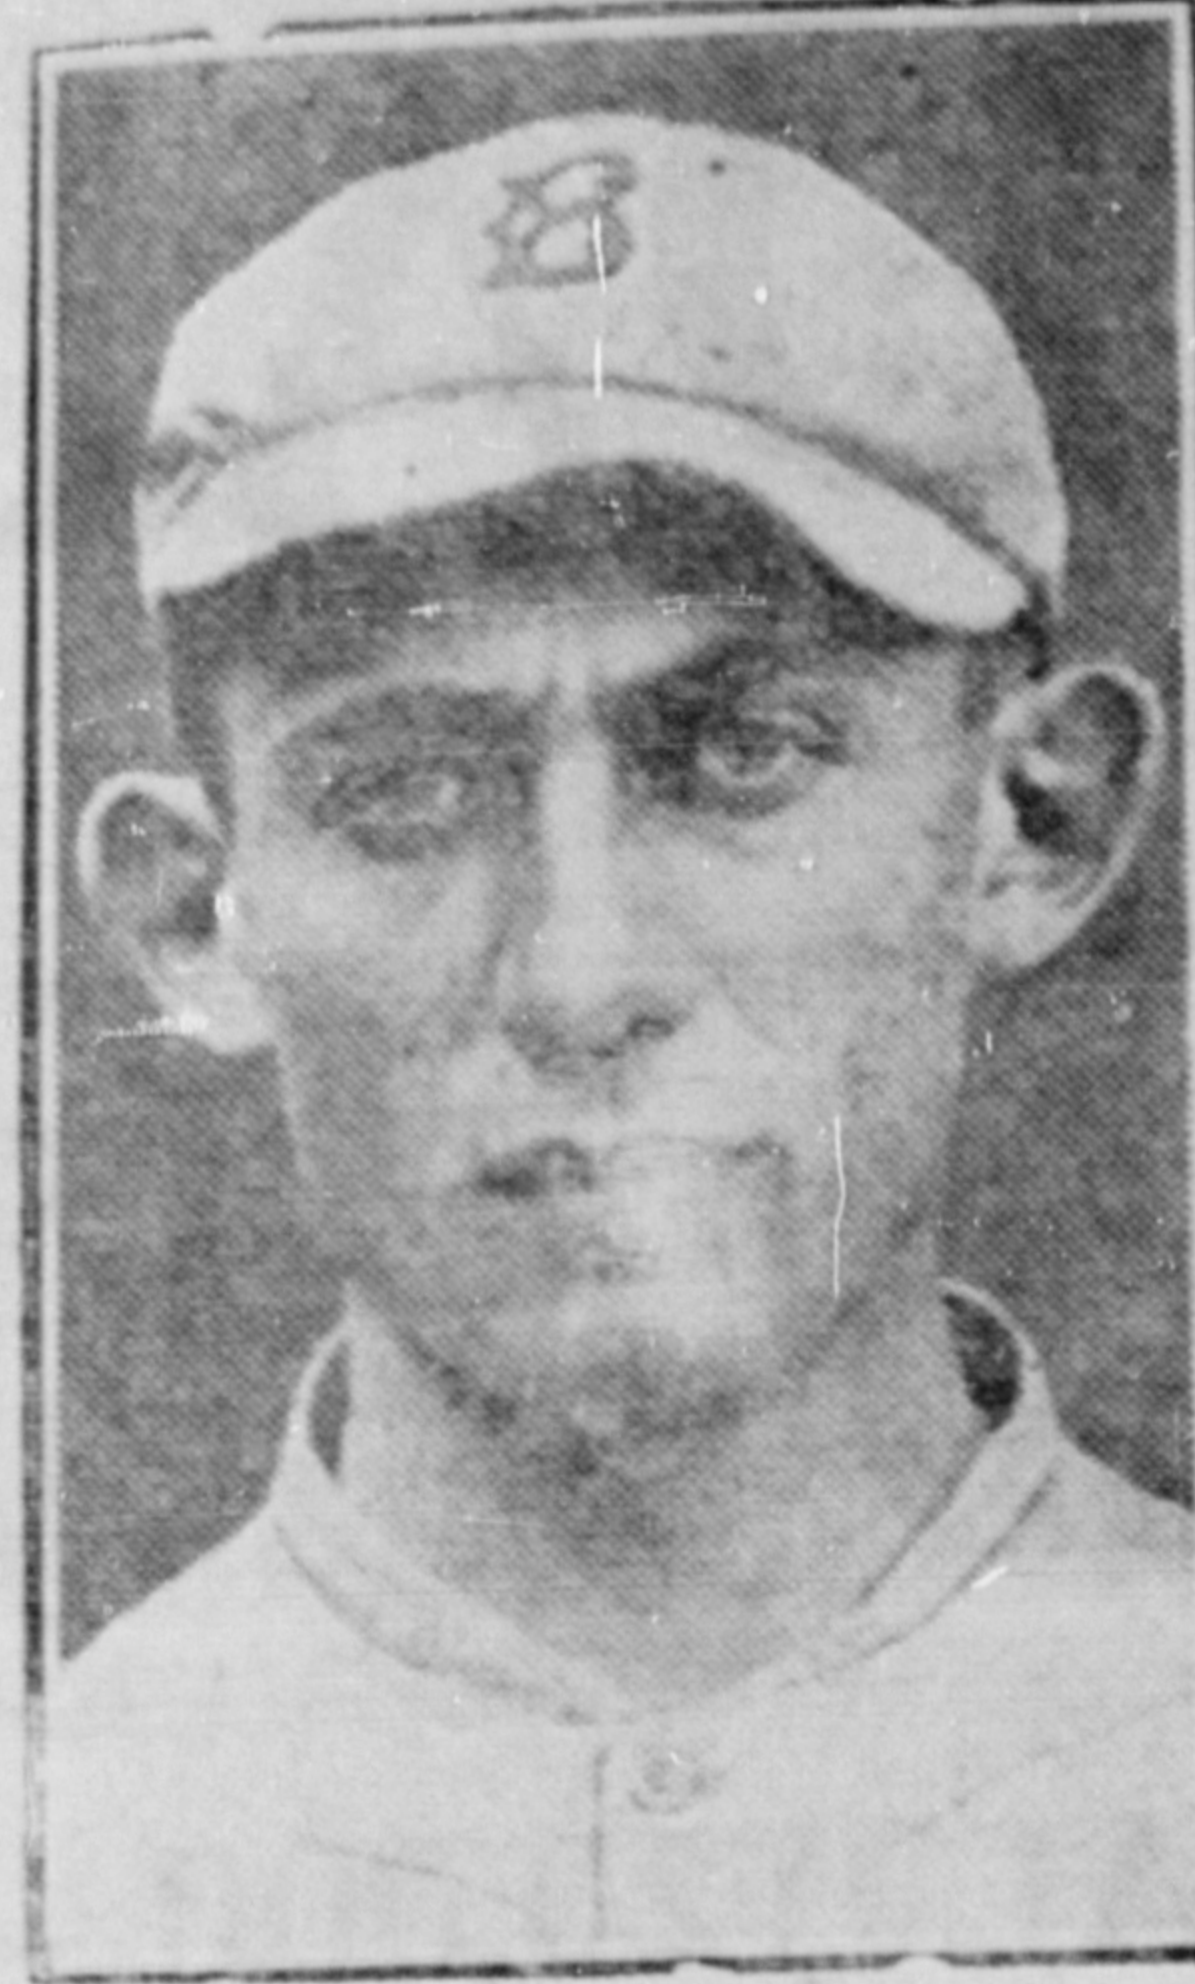

CLIFF DWELLERS' RELICS DISCOVERED

Denver, Sept. 26.—Ruins of what are believed to have been the last works of the cliff dwellers recently have been excavated in the Mesa Verde National park, in southwestern Colorado, according to word brought to Denver today by Enos A. Mills, Colorado author and naturalist, who has been inspecting the excavations. The ruins are distinctly different from any previously uncovered in Western America, and, according to Mr. Mills, open the way for new efforts to solve the mystery of the early races of the continent.

The excavation work has been done by government agents under the supervision of Dr. J. W. Fewkes, of the Smithsonian Institute. Government scientists uncovered a building of cut and polished stone. The structure was in the form of a letter D, with the upright 132 feet long and curved part 215 feet in circumference. The walls are about 7 feet thick and hollow, with rooms inside.

Dr. Fewkes believes the ruin was an uncompleted fortress, abandoned when the cliff dwellers disappeared from the Rocky mountain region.

at the front. The expenditure of this $600 will not damage the city's credit to any appreciable extent, while the camp kitchen will prove of inestimable value to our soldiers.

GERMAN BARON IS INTERNED IN LONDON

London, Sept. 26.—Baron Von Bissing, half brother of General Von Bissing, German military governor of Belgium, and a naturalized British subject, after fighting for months for his liberty, has been interned.

He was mysteriously spirited away today from his luxurious home in Kensington by detectives, who left a battalion of newspaper men on guard over an empty shell.

It is reported that the Islington workhouse will be the baron's domicile during the remainder of the war.

NEW CHARGES AGAINST ROBLIN AND FRIENDS

Winnipeg, Sept. 27.—Further information has been prepared by the Crown against three former Manitoba cabinet ministers, according to notification given to the defence by R. A. Bonnar. The new informations grow out of evidence of Horwood, James H. Howden is to be charged with perjury, and Dr. Montague and Sir Rodmond Roblin with destruction of public documents.

English experiments have shown that artificial silk makes more durable and elastic incandescent gas mantles than those made of the materials generally used.
