LONG DISCUSSION ON INDEMNITY BYLAW ?

He felt that the principle was right and that was the main thing. A man who is absent from The city council last night a meeting is incurring no loss and is therefore entitled to no indemnity. Ald. Montgomery thought that no alderman was morally justified in doing business with the city, though he might be legally right. He did not say that any undue influence had been brought to bear in placing city business, still he did not think that a man should hold a chair and do business with the city. He was willing to sacrifice something if Ald. McRae was willing to do the same and take no business from the city. Ald. McRae said that the thought of the business his firm might do with the city did not enter his mind from Jan. 1st to Dec. 31st. The firm had always Co., is being discharged from the sold goods to the city just as to Prince Albert. For the past few the Lower Intestine, which physicians anyone else. His firm's business with the city was only a trifle in the year's business and he saw no reason to change his mind about it.

Ald. Dybhavn took serious objection to Ald. McClymont's suggestion that the deduction only apply to aldermen who were out of town. It left a loop-hole for aldermen who might, on occasion, prefer to miss certain meetings. If a man cared to sit at home he could do so, without any penalty and he had known of cases where aldermen had deliberately stayed away from meetings. He heartily supported Ald. McRae's amendment.

Ald. McMeekin, in supporting the amendment, said that he had to supply a man to take his place when he attended meetings. He recognized this as one of his responsibilities in accepting the seat and had governed himself accordingly. He felt that it was only right that any absentee should have a deduction made.

Ald. McClymont said he was glad Ald. Dybhavn had pointed out the weakness in his amendment to the amendment. The amended clause carried, Ald. Montgomery dissenting.
