ORDER IN COURT TARDILY OBEYED

Lone Spectator Arose with an Amused Smile on Second Call of Usher

A little human touch came to relieve the sombre tones and austere lines of a certain Victoria courtroom, at the end of a rather wearisome case. There was only one spectator in court, a lady, who came in a few minutes before the court adjourned. As the Judge rose to leave the courtroom the customary formality of respect was observed by all others of those present, with one exception. That exception was the lady referred to.

The clerk of the court, noticing this incident, uttered in the blandest and mildest of tones, the formula in such cases made and provided, "Order in Court." The lady continued to sit, with a serenity and regardlessness of such mere courtly frivolities worthy Captain Bunsby himself, what time he beheld visions on the coast of Greenland. Again, and with a promptitude that suggested an almost appreciation of humors lying below the surface of things, the clerk repeated the ancient formula. And this time, with a smile of amusement, the lady rose.

The moral of the story, as Sam Weller would say, lies in the application of it. The lady was the wife of the Judge.
