Entertain Visitors To the City.

The directors of the fair announce that there is a very serious shortage of accommodation for visitors to the city. So many people are coming that it is very difficult to put them all up.

In view of this situation, the fair directors appeal to the people of Prince Rupert to aid them in making provision for those who come here. There are homes where a visitor could be put up for a few days. If the heads of these households would get in touch with Secretary Hunter, he would try to arrange that people who are congenial should meet.

The fair is a great event in the history of the city, and if no attempt is made to house the visitors they will not come again. Many visitors will stay with friends here but not all have friends in the city. On that account residents are urged to do their utmost to aid in solving the housing problem.

Archbishop Du Vernet on The Principle of Interest.

One of the most striking laws of the human mind is the power of the attention. This power can accomplish wonders so great that they seem almost incredible.

When on a dark night we watch from a steamer the searchlight turned upon the shore some objects spring into view and seem real, while other objects are lost in the shadows. In the same way the objects upon which we focus our attention become to us intensely real, while the objects upon which we never turn our attention might, so far as we are concerned, not exist. This is true whether the objects be material or spiritual.

It has been proved by experience that we best focus our attention upon the objects in which we are most interested. This is called the principle of interest.

This principle of interest is now being scientifically applied to the education of the young with most wonderful results. In the mind of an apparently stupid child the expert teacher discovers some germ of interest and uses this to awaken the dormant power of the attention, which is then skilfully turned to some associated interest of a higher type, and so little by little a marvelous transformation takes place.

May be Applied to Labor Problem.

This principle of interest should also be scientifically applied to the problem of labor. Everywhere there is a cry for greater production, but if this appeal is to awaken a genuine response in the minds of the laboring class it must make use of this principle of interest. It must be clearly shown that it is in the interest of the working man, in the interest of his family, in the interest of his country, and in the interest of mankind that there should be greater production. The principle of interest must always go hand in hand with the sense of responsibility, but there can be no adequate sense of responsibility without some measure of sharing both in the profit and also in the loss involved. The power of concentrated attention, so necessary to efficient production, cannot be discovered from the principle of sustained interest.

Go Deeper Than Superficial.

This principle of interest should further be scientifically applied to the problem of religion. The majority of people today are not vitally interested in the services of the Church. Not being interested enough to focus their attention upon spiritual things, such things have no apparent reality for them. No frantic effort to fiddle the fancy of a congregation by sensational methods will meet the gravity of the situation. In the realm of religion we must go deeper than the superficial. The spiritual needs of the people, both individual and social, must be first uncovered, and then truly satisfied by bringing them into sympathetic touch with the Spirit of Redeeming Love, and the Source of Eternal Goodness.

The laws of the human mind are the laws of God, and it is only through the principle of living interest and the power of concentrated attention that any man of any race or any creed can discover the Reality of God.

The table given is for Port Simpson but the time for Prince Rupert varies only a few minutes on some days and on others is the same.

The range of the tide may be computed as 5 per cent greater at Prince Rupert than at Port Simpson both at springs and neaps.

Therefore the rise in the Prince Rupert harbor is slightly greater than Port Simpson.

The height is in feet and tenths of feet above the average level of lower low water.

EVIDENCE IN APPEAL CASE

Under Protection of Court Appellant Admits Having Sold Liquor in His House.

In the continuation of the S. A. Corley liquor selling appeal case before Judge Young in the County Court yesterday afternoon, Chief of Police Vickers and Sergeant Adams were heard and also the evidence of three defence witnesses was taken. The officers testified as to the bringing of the exhibits to the police station and the seizure of liquor made.

The first witness for the defence was one Jacob A. Klecker, who testified to having stayed at the Royal Hotel on the night of August 20. He had been surprised to see Corley tending bar then as he had expected it would be McKay. During the cross-examination by Mr. Hooper, Mr. Patmore interrupted several times and was checked by the judge.

S. A. Corley was the main witness in his own defence. He flatly stated that the evidence of the detectives was a lie, a "frameup." "It is a lie to say that I have had liquor in the Royal bar since prohibition," stated the witness. The same evidence was given in the preliminary trial in regard to the hours in the attempt to prove an alibi for McKay, who was alleged to have made the sale was then given.

Admits Selling.

Mr. Hooper's cross-examination proved somewhat interesting for the fact was elicited, after court protection had been obtained, that Corley had sold liquor in his house to persons he knew well. "You didn't think much of the law, did you?" asked Mr. Hooper.

The report from the Royal Hotel of the list of lodgers from August 15 to September 1 was produced and it was pointed out by the prosecution that nowhere appeared the name of Klecker, who was said by the defence to have lodged there on August 20. To this Corley made the explanation that the name must have been omitted by his wife who made up these reports.

Under cross-examination, Corley swore positively that it was impossible for any one to see the cooler from the outside of the bar as Smith had sworn could be done. Since the time of the sale a change had been made in the arrangement and the cooler had been replaced.

In one place he offered to bet $100 with Mr. Hooper that it was impossible for a man standing at the outside of the bar to see the cooler inside where he was alleged to have placed the bottle he brought in. "Witness," corrected the judge, "this is no sporting house and I would have you confine your betting to your bar."

McKay Witness.

Kenny McKay was the last witness yesterday afternoon. In the examination in chief by L. W. Patmore, appellant's counsel, the witness denied having been in the bar on the night in question. He and "Slim" had been out for a time. It was not the truth that the detectives had bought a bottle from him. He had followed Corley's instructions never to have liquor in the bar or in his room. He had never seen or heard of Corley selling liquor.
