FLYING ROUTES ARE NUMEROUS

Another 7,000 Miles to be Added Next Spring in Europe

LONDON, Oct. 28.—Transport by air in Europe is now being developed energetically, thanks largely to the encouragement afforded by the pioneer services between London and the Continent. Commercial flying of a demonstration character has now taken place over approximately 6,000 miles of European air routes, and is being conducted regularly, in the form of daily or twice or three times weekly services, over a number of these initial routes. Plans are also in hand and should mature by next spring, and in some cases earlier, for roughly another 7,000 miles of main and inter-connecting routes. When these extensions are operating, and traffic calls for a more regular service on some of the routes already on tentative existence, we shall have 13,000 miles of European airways engaged in the transport of passengers, mails and goods.

One now looks to the realization, in the near future, of the dream of a really commercial day-and-night airway extending right through Europe from London to Constantinople. Important links in the chain exist already. The 250-mile section between London and Paris is not only working admirably, but is attracting a steadily increasing volume of traffic. The French authorities have just opened up another 250 miles stage between Paris and Strasbourg. The next section, Strasbourg-Munich, is promised before the end of the year. French experts say they are also confident now, that the remaining extensions, which are expected to run via Vienna, Budapest, Bukarest and Belgrade, so as to tap large centres of population, will at any rate be in partial operation by next summer. When this route is equipped fully, passengers who leave London after dinner one night should have travelled 2,000 miles by air, and actually reached Constantinople, by about dinner-time on the following evening.

The recently-opened route between London and Copenhagen, via Amsterdam, will, it is calculated, by next spring permit air travellers between London and Copenhagen, and also those between London and Berlin, who "change" at Bremen, to complete their journey during the course of a day's flying.

The Man in the Moon SAYS--

THAT a contemporary says the old women of the west have nothing particular on the prairie chicken.

THAT the newspapers are fair game for everyone to abuse. Go to it.

THAT the best way to cause a quarrel is to try to figure out whether a hunger striker commits suicide or is murdered.

THAT if you are short on argument take up the Bible and prove your case. The thing is easy enough if you have ever been to Sunday School.

THAT some of the people with full collars will lose some of their popularity after the Legislature meets.

THAT any man will gladly die for a woman but paying life insurance policies for her is quite a different matter.

THAT this mild weather is terribly hard on the coal merchants.

THAT, by the by, what has become of the "equal barons?"

THAT the following were some of the hobo sayings at the Baptist Church hobo supper last night.

THAT a wise hobo may patch a grief with a proverb.

THAT if a hobo can blush he is higher than the brute.

THAT love troubles no hobo whose head is clear.

THAT love may take a hobo in; only a lawyer can take him out.

THAT hobos must never appear put out when taken in.

THAT everything comes to the hobo who waits—on himself.

THAT hobos who live on their reputation must starve.
