LAKE ATLIN

Sitting on the deck of a steamer on Lake Atlin under the shadow of Cathedral Mountain an American who had travelled extensively exclaimed to me: "Bishop, I did not think that I should ever live to see such scenery as this." Of course the conditions were favorable. Fleecy clouds were floating round the mountain tops; the water was tinted with various colors ranging from the lightest green to the deepest blue. The reflections in the water were perfect, and all combined to make a scene never to be forgotten.

Lake Atlin is about eighty miles long and from two to six miles wide. While the level of this lake is 2,200 feet above the sea the mountains which almost encircle the lake, rise from one to five thousand feet higher than its surface, while at the head of the lake there is a glacier three miles wide and stretching back to the horizon. From the summit it flows in the opposite direction towards the sea, making a river of ice about seventy miles long.

The many creeks which have cut their way down to the lake and the rugged hills with their reddish streaks are rich in minerals, placer and quartz gold, silver and lead, iron and copper abound, but on account of the high cost of transportation, capital hesitates except in the case of hydraulic mining. Ever since the rush of '98 a stream of gold has steadily flowed out of the Atlin District, but the invariable cry is: "Just paying expenses."

When I first visited Atlin twelve years ago there was talk of a railway to be built from Atlin to the sea near Juneau to save the long journey round by Skagway. Nothing has been done in the way of a railway but a beginning has been made on a wagon road to the Canadian boundary on the Taku river, only about sixty miles more is required to complete this road. Motor boats can make their way up from the sea to this boundary. Perhaps after the war our American ally would consider for an exchange, or a sum of money, the ceding of a narrow strip of a few square miles at the head of Taku Inlet and so give us a Canadian port for the Atlin District, but even without this concession the Atlin people are justly entitled to a wagon road to the boundary. One who has been over this route assures me that a road could be easily made and that it would mean new life to the whole Atlin region.

I spent nearly a fortnight recently in this fascinating district ministering to the spiritual needs of the Protestant community in St. Martin's Church, Atlin, on the Sundays, July 1st and 8th. Many American tourists joined in our religious celebration of Dominion Day, singing lustily "Our Loved Dominion Bless with Peace and Happiness."

One who has seen the midnight sun on June 21st at Fort Yukon told me that he would have been disappointed with his trip if it had not been for Lake Atlin, which was worth it all—F. H. Du Vernet.
