INDUSTRIAL RECONSTRUCTION

Whether this is to be the last great war or not, there is no doubt that the whole world is moving steadily towards sympathetic considerations of the principles of peace. What is true of armed conflict between nations is also true of that more perpetual and insidious kind of warfare, which is commonly supposed to be of more recent origin than the other, but which is really a development of precisely the same tendencies.

Just so soon as purely servile conditions were abolished it must have become obvious that when two people stood in the mutual economic relation of employer and employed, there were only two alternative courses open to them, conflict or co-operation. They would have to co-operate sooner or later if they did not wish to starve. But in the meantime it was open to them, if they had reserves of subsistence to draw upon, to indulge in the ruinous luxury of economic conflict. The accumulated wealth of the whole British Empire has permitted the very free indulgence of this luxury. What has been spent on it within the limits of the Empire would go a long way towards paying the costs of the war. But when the war is over, the loss occasioned by strikes and lockouts will just be the one thing which the Empire as a whole and each constituent part thereof will be the least able to afford.

Keeping these considerations in mind, they have been the primary and practical reasons for the appointment of a Reconstruction Committee by the Government of Great Britain. This Committee has been charged with the task of drafting a scheme which, accepted in essence by the chief organizations of employers and employed, might check internal bleeding and enable the nation to make a good recovery from the external wounds of war.

This Reconstruction Committee has already reported to its Government. It recommends the formation of National, District and Works Councils, on which the organizations of the employers and the employed are to be represented, and allowance is to be made for the merging or co-operation of the existing bodies such as the Conciliation Boards. The new council goes a step further than the conciliation boards. The idea is developed by the anticipation of conciliation by Conciliation implies just the very breakdown in good relations and in national production, which it is our chief object to avoid, and which can be avoided only by a prescient and definite understanding on all disputed points likely to arise."

The question of the future relations of the two constituent divisions of industry, capital and labor, are engaging the attention of both employers and the trade unions all over. The heavy task of reconstruction after the war cannot afford to be embarrassed by disputes. In Canada as in other countries, the best means to avoid such must be undertaken. Whatever scheme is adopted, it will require to be one in which the workmen will perceive an avenue not only towards steadier employment and better earnings, but also toward something, whose price cannot be expressed in terms of wages or even of profit sharing—something the lack of which has been at the foundation of much industrial trouble in many parts—namely, a definite economic status firmly based upon a recognized share in industrial responsibility.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Lord Rhondda, the British Food Controller, has got powers the same as the Admiralty, and the Ministry of Munitions already possess for requisitioning and controlling prices. He will pay a price based upon the cost of production with the addition of pre-war rates of profit, without regard to the price ruling in the open market. Did the Canadian Food Controller do something like this, it is possible that the soldiers' dependents and the rest of us might live a little better.

A contemporary says, "Mr. Justice Galt investigated Mr. Rogers and reported against him. Mr. Rogers came back with a commission which investigated Mr. Jus-

The Waste of War
is terrible, but the waste of food in times of peace is colossal. Rich and poor alike eat tons of food that has little food value—and this useless food breaks down the so-called eliminating organs and depletes the physical and mental powers.

Shredded Wheat Biscuit
is all food, prepared by a process which makes every particle thoroughly digested. It is 100 per cent. whole wheat. Two or three of these Biscuits with milk, make a nourishing meal, supplying the greatest amount of energy at lowest cost. Delicious with sliced bananas, berries or other fruits.

Made in Canada.

Galt's investigation of Mr. Rogers, and found Mr. Galt all wrong and Mr. Rogers all right. Now then, how would it do for another commission to investigate the investigation of the commission which investigated the investigation of Mr. Justice Galt?"

From the Philadelphia Telegraph: Catching tons of fish just to throw them back into the sea is a wasteful business. Yet it has been going on these many years in the great estuaries and shore waters of British Columbia and elsewhere. The war and its attendant food shortage will put a stop to such nonsense. Halibut fishermen are not going to throw overboard any more tons of black cod, red cod and grey cod for which no profitable market has existed before. Some friend of humanity has devised a solution into which these fish can be dipped and so preserved with their full fresh flavor, for as long as two weeks. That means they can be packed without ice (in Prince Rupert) and consumed by epicures in Philadelphia.
