RECONSTRUCTION

Let us not forget the future, so that it may not be the recurring decimal of a bad past. Everything points to the need of reconstruction, and the uselessness of mere restoration.

As the immediate outcome of the war, which is at present in operation in Europe, it is the hope of all thinking men and women that a proper reconstruction in the affairs of human society will occur, as distinct from mere restoration. In the minds of many people, reconstruction is only too often regarded, as synonymous with restoration. Whereas there is a wide difference. It is impossible to pick up the threads of things where they were broken three years ago by the outbreak of hostilities. Few indeed, would really want to go back to that time and have things put back just as they were, even were it possible. But it may be that in some quarters an effort will be made to have the old time conditions reinstated, in spite of the progress, and real progress too, made by democracy since 1914.

Restoration will undoubtedly take place—of Alsace Lorraine to France, of the Irredenta to Italy, of Poland to the Polish people, of the war scarred country to smiling prosperity, of the destroyed cities and towns to habitable conditions, and so far as is possible, of the deported inhabitants of Belgium to their own country. There it may be said that restoration ends, and such restoration will form the initial movement of Reconstruction. As compulsory military service is only one phase of conscription, so is restoration only one phase of reconstruction, but the process cannot stop with the establishment of the status quo ante bellum.

The demobilization of the armies and the re-employment of the munition workers on munitions of peace is one problem out of which many others will arise. Even now there is great industrial unrest the world over, so much so that in Great Britain the Government have been kept very busy. Better economic conditions are demanded, even in war time. The position will become very much more acute during the course of and after demobilization. "The completion of reconstruction policies is urgent, important and vital, in order to rebuild the nation after the war and to prepare for new industrial development and better economic conditions."

"Our civilization is uneasily poised on Labor's slowly straightening back."

Discussing this matter in the London Observer recently, Mr. L. J. Garvin comes to the conclusion that "Labor is profoundly disturbed by doubt about the whole future. That is the deepest cause of the unrest. Labor fears that victory will leave it at the mercy of hazard and the employer. There is nothing bad or stupid about this feeling. It springs from utter uncertainty, which is the most trying of all conditions. It is natural. It is inevitable. It must be reasonably met. Nothing whatever is more needed than to kindle the imagination and the faith of Labor by a vision which shall be mighty, but at the same time true. Any programme of reconstruction must be as definite, as vast, and as practical as audacious. The bolder the better. We must be thoroughly ready for reconstruction long before the end of the war. If an early peace caught us in our present unprepared state it would be a social disaster. The country won't wait for efficient reconstruction as it waits for the end of the war."

"Millions of men who have fought will be the political pith and bone and marrow of the nation. After what they have seen and gone through, they will expect things. After the trenches, they will not stand muddle and makeshift at home, much less positive hardship and every kind of disillusionment. If we are not prepared for their reception and reabsorption, for their maintenance and employment, for giving them sure promise for an unmistakably better life and future than they had before the war, they will want to know the reason why."

The greatest question will be the triple problem which involves the future relations of labor, capital and Government.

Putting Pep and Punch into the daily job during the hot days is a matter of physical and mental fitness—and this comes from foods that supply the greatest amount of real nutriment with the least tax upon the digestive organs. Cut out meat and potatoes and eat Shredded Wheat Biscuit with sliced bananas or other fruits and green vegetables. Strengthening and nourishing.

Made in Canada.

The millions returned from the war and the whole democracy must have the assurance of a fuller and a happier existence. They must have better housing, better health, better training, physical and mental, a better chance of their advancement in their vigor and prime, a better prospect for old age, as well as better wages and a more intelligent association with capital in return for higher production. The whole nation must be convinced, as soon as possible that this New Vision is coming true."

It will come true, and the war may not be without its recompense, even to this generation.
