MAKE POTASH FROM KELP AT QUEEN CHARLOTTES

Prior to the outbreak of the war, the world obtained most of its potash supply from Germany. The price was then about $48 per ton on this Pacific coast. Now the price is between $150 and $180, and even at that price the supply is short. To help to overcome this scarcity, the International Chemical Co., Ltd., a concern financed by the National Chemical Co., Ltd., is now completing the installation of the equipment for a potash plant at Pacofi, on Cumsheewa Inlet on Moresby Island. The old plant which belonged to the Standard Fisheries there has been taken over. New machinery has been added for the recovery of Potash. In addition, the company proposes to extract oils from non-edible fish, and also to make fertilizer from the fish after the oil extraction process.

All the edible fish caught by the company's boats will be placed in its cold storage plant, and sent in weekly shipments to Prince Rupert for packing. Potash, oil, fertilizer and fish will be the four-fold enterprise of this new company.

Some of the most extensive kelp beds are situated on Cumsheewa Inlet, where this company have got licences from the government. These kelp beds extend over an area of some ten square miles. The new plant will have a capacity for handling about 1000 tons of wet kelp per day. The cutting of the kelp will start within the next few weeks. This harvest of the sea is reaped by knives affixed or suspended below scows, which pass over the kelp beds, cutting over the kelp growth as it passes along. The kelp rises to the surface, and is gathered and sent to the potash plant, where by a special process, the potash is recovered.

The Chemical Company is now operating large plants at Los Angeles and San Diego, and even at the pre-war prices, it is claimed that the company would be able to operate satisfactorily owing to the exceptional richness of the kelp beds on the Queen Charlotte Islands. It claims for the Moresby Island plant that it will be equipped in the most up to date and efficient manner, second to none in existence.
