POLAND SHUNS YOKE OF TEUTON

London, Sept. 14.—The recent announcement of the resignation of the Polish State Council made it obvious that the situation in Poland was not favorable to Austro-German occupation. From admissions in the German newspapers and from other material available, a special correspondent of The Manchester Guardian shows it to be much worse than appears on the surface. By a manifesto, dated November 5th, 1916, the two Kaisers proclaimed the independence of the Polish State. Among the reasons for the step was that the two Empires wanted to raise a Polish auxiliary army, and being unable to do it by force, expected to master the problem by constituting Poland an independent and allied State, counting particularly on Polish feeling against secular Tsardom.
The German press is now admitting that these calculations failed. Though but a few weeks previously hundreds of thousands of Polish citizens had paraded the streets of Warsaw and Lublin in honor of the independent Polish State, the two Kaisers' manifesto was received with baffling coolness and even enmity, and as for volunteers flocking in their thousands to join the colors of the new State, the result was still more disappointing.

The Germans found a way out.
The army was to take an oath of fidelity, not only to the Polish State, but also to the Austro-German allies for the duration of the war. Of course, the State Council fell in with the idea, and a fresh appeal was issued for volunteers. This time the Germans might have had more success but for the untoward accident of the Russian revolution, which swept all Poland with a wave of emotion and made everybody regret the separation from the new democratic republic. The revulsion of feeling was unmistakable, there were numerous demonstrations held by the Left party and the manifesto of November shrank to miserable proportions in the universal estimation.
