THE WAR

One of the peculiarities of the state of mind which is to be found prevalent in Germany is the hatred of Great Britain and the British Empire, which has found expression as the result of the Empire's entry into the conflict. This is not the result of the gradual German defeat, but was noticeable from the very start of hostilities. The hatred evinced by Germany and the Germans can be no sudden growth nor outburst of feeling, but must have been carefully nurtured throughout long years. Another reason for such a state of mind on the part of a great nation such as modern Germany was in 1914, other than national jealousy, is hard to find.

At the end of the war, when Germany has been conclusively shown that jealousy among nations does not pay in any single way, it is possible that that hatred may be a long time in dying out, most especially against Great Britain. The reasons for this is shown in the recent writings of M. J. M. Rosny, senior member of the Goucourt Academy, who in a striking article contributed to "Le Pays" recently shows the superiority of Great Britain's position in regard to the war as compared with Germany.

"In 1915," says M. Rosny, "Britain's participation in our offensive was still of a minor character. In 1916 it became formidable on the Somme. In 1917 it is mowing down the Teuton legions unremittingly. Britain can say to the enemy, 'We have taken 110,000 German prisoners; you have only 53,000 British.' She can also say, 'You have not taken one yard of my Continental or Colonial territory. You meant to invade Egypt, but our soldiers are now advancing towards Palestine. You threatened India, but we are invading Mesopotamia. You had opened your mouth wide to swallow up the Belgian, French, and Portuguese Colonies and a good part of our own, but the French, Belgian, Portuguese, and British occupy nearly all your African lands. You have been banished from Asia. Your carefully secreted strategic islands are occupied by our soldiers and those of the Dominions. Spite of your submarines our fleet is blockading you and immobilizing your Dreadnoughts. Vanquished on the battlefield, swept from the seas, driven out of the colonies, what have you taken in exchange? Your greatest exploits against Britain have been the cowardly murder of women and children with the aid of Zeppelins and avions; the drowning of crews and innocent passengers by your pirates. We, however, have wrested from you your share of the universe.'

"That is what Britain can say to Germany, and what well-informed Germans know only too well, from that brute Reventlow down to the most insignificant Parliamentarians and journalists. And this is not all. France, Italy, and Britain are to have their strength increased. A new champion whose resources and energy are inexhaustible has come forward.

"The loss of her Colonies has particularly embittered Germany's hatred against Britain. Although she has been beaten by the French more than by any other Entente nation, she consoles herself with the thought that she still holds several French departments within her clutches. Nothing can console her for Britain's successes. She has nothing to compensate for either her pride or her material interests. It is consequently comprehensible that her fierce hatred has hesitated at no transgression, no act of cowardice, no crime. The Germans will not occupy a single British islet. They will see the whole world cherish heroic, humanitarian France when they themselves will be the reviled horde, the nation accursed on all the continents and throughout all the archipelagoes. Their only hope of redemption is to destroy the dynasty."

Knowledge of human nature and the natural or unnatural jealousy which will still rankle in the German mind for years make it all the more necessary that she be thoroughly beaten and put into such a position that she can no more menace the peace of the world or of the British Empire.

ALAS! POOR MUGGINS !!

Yesterday morning one of the best known characters from one end of the Bulkley Valley to the other met with an untimely death in the streets of Prince Rupert. Muggins was his name and his many friends up river will be sorry to hear of his demise. Muggins was a fox terrier, which belonged to Joe Sexton, of Smithers, and he was a terrier surpassing wise. In a moment, however, yesterday morning, while playing with other little dogs in the street in front of the Empress Hotel, Muggins got in the way of the fire engine, and is now no more.

Muggins had many friends, both in town and in the interior. He has been the shadow of Joe Sexton for the past six years, who feels the loss of his companion very touch.
