KAISER VOTE FOR?

Sir, - Who would the Kaiser vote for, Laurier or Borden? This is a query that meets us on every turn of the road. We see it on billboards, on picture screens, and in the subsidized press. As the people of Canada are paying for all this riotous advertising we may as well examine the question.

To begin wth, we must assume that the Kaiser is familiar with aused to be done assessment work on the past and present. Being so, he will naturally lean towards the party whose followers, some years ment work for 1914, 1915, and 1916, and ago, burnt down the parliament have paid for said work and recording buildings at Montreal, and follow- same the sum of $307.50. They told the French-Canadians at that time that if the Laurier Naval Bill was passed the young people would be drafted into the navy. and they would be forced to take part in Britain's wars whether they desired it or not. Such a prospect was intolerable to the Tory of 1911, and it was somewhat disagreeable to the Kaiser as well.

The Kaiser would, in all likelihood, vote for the man whose finance minister said to Sir Sam Hughes, "I would not recruit another man, Sam. Canada has done enough for England." If the Kaiser has a copy of Hansard, and no doubt he has, he will find that Borden himself told Sir Sam to go easy on recruiting, especially WEPAY among the employees of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company, 23 for which concern Borden seemed FOR RAW extremely solicitous. The Kaiser will also find in the pages of Hansard that Sir Sam intimated that there was German gold behind all

For these, and a thousand other reasons, the Kaiser would cast his vote for Borden and the Union Government. He would be a d-d
