UNIONISM

The hope has been expressed in many quarters that a permanent Union Government would be a good thing for the country at large, with the old political landmarks swept away. Partyism is a thing abhorred by many people. Yet there is little reason for this, so long as opinion is divided, on the great questions which come up from time to time. Wherever there are two opinions on any matter of politics, there will be the two parties.

What those who hope for a permanent Union Government want is doubtless what one section in Great Britain have been wanting for a long time, and that is a Business Government, comprising the best men in the country, irrespective of their previous labels.

The present coalition which has been formed in Canada is held up in certain quarters as an example of what might be done even in peace time, but it is hardly likely that the Union Government as presently constituted will survive long the signing of peace. This Union Government is "an innovation based solely upon the exigencies of the war." It is pointed out that it could not have been erected upon any other foundation. It has certain very large problems to deal with, and which may split the present cabinet wide open. There are certain questions which divide the present administration hopelessly. One of these questions which is a serious one for the West—and the West now in Parliament has the balance of power—and it may not be possible to put off dealing with such a controversial question till the war is over.

Government ownership of public utilities is another of the vexed questions which all members of the government do not see eye to eye. While the Union Government is a war government, and the winning of the war is its first consideration, that will not and indeed cannot prevent the solving of these problems in the meantime, should occasion demand. The Kaiser cannot be permitted to stop our social evolution.

The government are at one as to the "why" of their actions. The "how" is a different matter. Both Liberals and Conservatives of the West have more in common with each other than have the Liberals and Conservatives further east because as to certain questions the West is almost as a unit. The West stands for advanced measures which sooner or later are bound to be challenged by the reactionary interests who must lose by them.

In many questions the two elements constituting the Unionist party will be found irreconcilably arrayed against each other. There are Imperialists and Autonomists. Protectionists and free traders, and so forth and reconstruction after reconstruction of the government need not be unexpected.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Between soft rain and wet snow we'd vote for rain.

The season's popular song. Words by Alfred Lord Tennyson, music by Sam Newton. "Ring out the false, ring in the true." The composer calls it a good "old air," so it must be one of the efforts of his youth.

Four mayoralty candidates this year. We were offered two to one, bar one, this morning.

A return to public discussion of municipal matters on the platform before the election will be welcomed by the electorate. It is good that public questions should be aired viva voce even once a year.

There is something almost ludicrous in the reported terms of peace which the German government are said to have offered as the basis for negotiations. First of all, they want their colonies back—Germany's place in the sun. And secondly the Germans would ask of the inhabitants in the occupied departments of France whether or not they would prefer French or German government. After three and a half years of the kindly German mailed fist, there is on doubt as to the liking the French people have for it.

It would not be surprising if the Germans also demanded that the Belgian people be given the same opportunity of self determination as to their future destiny. If they had any liking for the Hun invaders, after three and a half years, it would show up. The German still evidently believes in himself.
