REPRISALS

The recent accounts of the British air raids on German cities, which succeeded each other so rapidly, will be welcomed by all the allies. At first, this form of attacking the enemy was considered to be "un-British" and was placed on a par with the torpedoing of ships by submarines without warning. Gradually, however, the apparently phlegmatic British mind was brought round to consider a policy of reprisals, similar to that which had been adopted by the French government. This policy meant that for every air raid made on Great Britain, the British aviators would make one back on Germany in return. This was all right, of course, so far as it went. But it did not go far enough. Reprisals are better than no reprisals, but attack, and continuous attack is better than reprisals, if we want to demoralize the enemy.

The German idea of air raids upon open towns was so to scare and demoralize the civil population that there would spring up a universal cry for peace, which would hamper the government. This, of course, applies to the German people as well as to any of the allied countries. There is no doubt that a systematic bombardment of the German cities and towns from the air, and the continuous blowing up of his railroad communications would go a long way towards bringing pressure to bear upon the Kaiser and his government. They do not want peace just now. They are still of the hope that the allies will weary of the slaughter and quit, before the German armies are finally and decisively beaten.

But with the German people from one end of the country to the other clamoring for peace, and the cessation of the allies' air raids, the Kaiser would have to make overtures, or else have to deal with his own people.

The mastery of the air is the only means whereby the allies can chase the German fleet out from its safe anchorage behind Heligoland. The British ships cannot penetrate through the maze of mine fields protecting these treacherous waters, with any degree of safety. The only method left is to destroy their bases, and to bomb the warships from the anchorages. From the manner in which the allies are building aeroplanes, it is evident that they have already perceived this to be the case. They have the world to draw upon for supplies of material for aeroplane construction, and should be able to beat the Germans so far as speed of construction is concerned. It would seem as if important developments will be witnessed in the air in the immediate future.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Congratulations to his worship the new mayor.

At the same time, we offer congratulations to the unsuccessful candidates.

The election passed off so quietly yesterday that a stranger would have hardly known that there was such a thing in progress.

France is having another of the dramatic exposures which come up from time to time in that country. Caillaux seems to be in for it. If the French government did not get the goods on him, they got them in Florence. They got the goods though.

According to the plans of Caillaux, General Sarraill, commanding until lately in the Balkans, was to be the next commander-in-chief of the armies of France. The inactivity of Sarraill in the Balkans has been severely criticized in the British newspapers. And it is openly alleged that his inactivity was for a purpose.

According to plans, he should have attacked Bulgaria when Roumania joined in. But he did not, and the Bulgarians are said to have known that he would not. If this be so, it is more than time he was gone.

affection to spread in the allied countries, for the betrayal of the allies' military secrets, and of the other actions of her secret agents is known, it will no longer be a matter for wonder that the war has dragged along so long. The real wonder is that Germany has accomplished so little.

The 18th of this month was the date fixed for the completion of the overseas soldiers' vote for the Dominion election. That is today.

When in doubt, play trump, is an axiom in whist. The getting of the drydock plant into operation is the trump which remains yet to be played. The new mayor and council cannot follow suit any longer.

Have you heard of the real state of affairs with the game warden? He hasn't got a —. But we'd better not mention it. It might give the game away.

The Canadians are again on the job near Lens, notwithstanding the wintry weather. The Germans doubtless have appreciated the Canucks at their full value by this time.

DIVINE RIGHT

"He was an instrument chosen by God, and he knew it. For us all, and especially for us Princes, he raised and made to shine most brilliantly a jewel which we must reverence and hold as sacred—Kingship by Divine Right."
