CHEAP FISH

The recommendation which the provincial committee has made to the Dominion Food Controller regarding the operation of trawling and trawlers out of Prince Rupert will doubtless have some effect in drawing attention in high places to the vast quantities of fish food which are available on this coast for the getting. It is realized that in order to substitute fish for beef and bacon, which are so urgently required elsewhere, fish must be offered at prices which will appeal to the consumer. If the price of fish approximates that of beef, there is not much chance that it will be used to the same extent. By selling two pounds of fish for fifteen cents as is recommended, there will be created a demand for these cheaper varieties, which for delicacy and flavor in many cases are superior to halibut. It is considered that a market could be found, and a large market at that, for Pacific fish as far east as Winnipeg. It has to be remembered that there are very many people in Canada who come from countries where there is a great variety of fish food consumed. They know these different varieties. While there are many people in Canada who cannot tell the difference between a haddock and a codling, and who have never seen a flounder or a crab except in picture books, there are very many more who do know these distinctions, and who would be ready purchasers could they get them to buy.

Taken hold of in the right fashion, there is little doubt but that trawling will eventually be as popular a method of fishing on this Pacific coast as it is on the North Sea. It is popular there because it is economical, and there is always a demand for the varieties of fish caught and offered for sale. The creation of a market for these fish should be easier at this time than at any other, seeing that meat products are scarce and high priced. It should afford a first-class opportunity for the establishment of a permanent trade in these other varieties of fish.

The problem of the fish waste which has been going on on this coast for so many years should also be tackled at this time. Fishermen find that there is little or no demand for black or red cod. If they do bring their catches of these varieties into port, they do not receive the same price for cod as they do for halibut. So if they have struck a good fishing ground, rather than fill their vessels up with cod, there are thrown away and only halibut kept, which obtains the higher price. The food value of black or red cod is but little different from halibut, and if it were known just what quantities of these varieties the fishermen discard as waste during the course of the year, it would be quite surprising. It is simple waste of food, when the necessity for the conservation of food supplies is most necessary. But if the fishermen cannot dispose of their catches, or else get but a small price compared with halibut, there is little can be done until the demand comes for them. Fishermen are not fishing for their health, nor yet for the purpose of supplying food primarily. They are out risking their lives for as much as they can make. So long as they can make more by catching halibut, they will do so. And just so soon as they can get as much for cod as for halibut, then they will bring in what heretofore they have thrown away.

If the Food Controller would arrange for the handling of all the fish that is landed, and arrange for the purchase of fish, as fish, he would get all the wanted, which would go a long way towards making up the deficient food supplies of the world at the present moment. The Food Controller has the power, or if he thinks he has not, he is in the best possible position to get it, for the adequate attention being paid to this, our chief industry.

POLYGLOT BAGDAD

There are so many different languages and forms of religion in Bagdad today that one of the necessities imposed on the military authorities has been the provision of five temporary churches. In one of the churches in which Indian services are held, Anglicans, Nonconformists, and Roman Catholics occupy the building in succession. Altogether as many as seven services in various languages on one day are held—English, Urdu, Latin, Tamil and Punjabi. In the four other churches services are conducted at the same time in Chaldaic, Syrian, Arabic, and Armenian. One of the chaplains of the Indian troops states that on one Sunday he had men representing five different races. As they did not understand one another's language, he had to use a sixth language understood by them all, and that was English.
