AESOP UP-TO-DATE

"Duellions, or perhaps better known under her pet name, Bellona, was the ugly daughter of Mars, whose chariot she would prepare when he went to war. Whip in hand and torch, and with wild hair, she would herself follow the campaign, animating the combatants on either side, she cared not which so long as they fought; and dealing death and destruction with an impartiality worthy of her antecedents. She had her temples, too, being a goddess; and whether at Comana, or the Porta Carmentalis or elsewhere would give audience to her votaries and her victims. She has them still (as an immortal her day endures, and will doubtless outlast humanity) and to one of these fanes, where a levee was holding within recent memory, there came a warrior the worse for wear. His crest (an eagle) was shorn, his moustachios had dropped somewhat of their truculence, his blade had lost its point.

"You've been having the time of your life, I should say," remarked the divinity with gusto; "What can I do for you?" The warrior blew a sigh, and the chamber at once filled with a pungent gas. Bellona sneezed. "Stop that," she cried, "and tell me what you want; or by my head, I'll have you — but surely I've seen you before," and dealt him a searching glance.

"Madame, you have. It is nearly four years since we met," replied the superman, for indeed it was none other, "and I don't mind telling you that the years have had the advantage of me, — I've lost weight."

"Well, what of that, so did my father when Venus got hold of him."

"Aye, but I've lost more than that; I've lost credit, I've lost prestige, I've lost, must I say it, honor; and you promised me, in writing, too —"

"Oh, that's nothing—a mere scrap of paper."

"But I believed you, Madame I believed in your aid— Was it for this that I burned the joss-stick at your shrine; that I offered you my millions of kannonen-futter, and have sacrificed them too? Was it —?"

"Not so fast, my merry mortal. Keep a respectful tongue in your head. You're not the All Highest here. And she clapped her hands. 'I see you've had about enough.'"

"Well, to say the truth, I have; but I daren't tell them so—it would cost me my crown and my kingdom, did their War Lord admit his dogs were beaten. But I have a notion, and though I know it's not entirely in your line, I trust with an eye to the future—more blood, more war—that you will be able and even willing to further it for the nonce. You have a fair cousin —"

"Ha. What of her. She's been in the window long enough."

"It isn't herself I want. I want her silver wings."

"To replace your discredited Zeppelins, your disconcerted fliers?"

"No, Madame, no; I want the wings of peace to do a little flight on my own account; only temporary, of course; but they will serve for recuperation, and them—"

"For the land's sake; if that don't take the cake. But there's some method in your madness, if the flight is only a ruse de guerre, so to speak. As it happens, my cousin is just spending the weekend with us, and although I couldn't think of introducing you to one so chaste (she's sleeping now, dear girl) still I think it would be quite easy, as a joke of course, to abstract her wings—she has a fatal habit of detaching them when she lies down and you might be up and off before she could say 'hoch.'"

Yes.

This little tale, being only up to date, is not quite complete. Another chapter has yet to be enacted, but it is sufficient to point out the moral of any "German peace." If there be one thing more offensive than war, it can be peace, and the "strong German peace," which the enemy is so fond of talking about would be actually more offensive to the British Empire and its allies than the continuation of the war. The fact stands, and a moment's reflection will endorse the statement as it stands. This parable, written by a soldier, Major M. Bent, is not only a soldier's view of the matter. It is the view which will commend itself to the great majority of British people. "The wise among the allies will have nothing to do with the unclean thing till the liar is consigned to brimstone and the burning lake. Let him sue for peace, if he wants to, but not to Bellona."

LONDON, April 26.—The enormous losses inflicted on the enemy by the British have caused General Ludendorff to change his tactics and he has ordered that no more massed attacks be made by the Germans. The correspondent of the Daily Mail at British Headquarters in France reports that General Ludendorff in an order dated March 30, said:

"The idea of forcing success by the employment of masses must be abolished absolutely. It only leads to unnecessary losses. The effective use of weapons, not of numbers, gives the decision."

The German method of advance since the order, says the correspondent, has been to push forward small bodies of troops with light machine guns.

Constipation Cured in His 78th Year without Drugs

Did you ever know any person who was permanently cured of Constipation by taking drugs of any kind? Drugs seem to assist Nature at the time, but as time goes on larger doses are necessary until the trouble becomes chronic.

Internal Bathing is the only real cure for Constipation. It keeps the Colon or Lower Intestine free from all accumulation. Soon the system performs its regular functions unaided, and there is no further trouble.

Mr. A. McLean, of Conger Lumber Co., Parry Sound, writes:—"I have been troubled with Constipation for the last 35 or 40 years, and could not pass one day without taking medicine. I have used the 'J. B. L. Cascade' since getting it 21 days ago, with wonderful results. Will recommend any person to use it."

Dr. Chas. A. Tyrrell of New York, invented and perfected the "J. B. L. Cascade" for Internal Bathing, which is today the only efficient means of accomplishing the desired results. Dr. Tyrrell has published an interesting book on Internal Bathing, called "Why Man of Today is Only 50 Per Cent. Efficient," which can be had free for the asking of Cyril H. Orme, Druggist, cor. 3rd Ave. and 4th St. He will also be pleased to show and explain the "J. B. L. Cascade" to you.
