THE ZIONIST TRADITION

The reception of the Zionist Commission in Palestine reminds us that one of the unexpected results of the great war is the prospect of the final delivery of the Holy Land from the rule of the Turks; unexpected, because when we entered upon the struggle with Germany, we did not imagine that Turkey would be foolish enough to unite her fortunes to those of Prussian militarism, and when the success of German diplomacy became obvious few of us were bold enough to prophesy that the war in the East would be carried so far into the enemy's country. Scarcely less surprising is the sympathy with Jewish aspirations which the conquest of Palestine has revealed, a sympathy both more widespread and more active than the leaders of the Jewish movement had themselves realized. Part of the explanation lies in the fact that the Jewish hope of a return to the promised land is itself so very ancient, and that, for several generations, it has aroused interest among the British people.

The modern Zionist movement began in the seventeenth century, and it received a certain amount of sympathy among those English Puritans who were looking for the Millennium. More than three centuries and a half had elapsed since the expulsion of the Jews from England by Edward I., and the memory of the hatred with which they were regarded had become only a tradition, while the Jews themselves had forgotten the intolerant treatment which they had received as the chattels of mediaeval kings. Isolated individuals of the Jewish race can be traced in England at many periods after the disappearance of the Jewish communities from the towns, and, after the Reformation, they came in considerable numbers, especially from Spain. Sympathy could not be refused to victims who were fleeing from the terrors of the Inquisition, and the Jews found the people in Britain more friendly than any other nation.

But the aims of Menasseh ben Israel and of their English sympathisers, were much wider than a mere settlement. The settlement in this country was to be only a preliminary to the return to Palestine, and many of the Jews believed that a Davidic origin could be claimed for Cromwell, and that he was the fore-ordained instrument of their restoration. The Protector's death put an end to these hopes, but they soon revived under the leadership of a Smyrna Jew who, in 1666, proclaimed himself to be the Messiah. All over Europe the Jews, poor and rich, began to get themselves ready to occupy the Holy Land, and rich London bankers shared in the excitement with the poor and oppressed Jews throughout Europe. The expectation survived the exposure of the impostor in whose ambition the movement had originated, and the poorer and more ignorant members of the scattered Jewish community continued for nearly a hundred years to cherish the delusion of an immediate restoration. A period of reaction followed, and the better treatment which the Jews received in many countries turned the aspirations of their leaders towards the identification of Jewish interests with those of the varied peoples among whom they lived. But the spiritual foundations of the old hope were laid too deep to be destroyed and the faith in an eventual restoration persisted. In the nineteenth century a revival of a belief in the early coming of the Millennium gave the Zionist idea help similar to that which it had received in the time of Cromwell; philanthropists like Lord Shaftesbury espoused the cause, writers like George Eliot gave it a new inspiration, and Disraeli, never unmindful of the rock out of which he was hewn, encouraged Laurence Oliphant in his scheme of persuading the Turks to consent to the establishment of a Jewish State in Palestine.

It was, however, the astonishing and deplorable outburst of anti-Semitism in France, Germany, and Austria, and more especially in Russia, in the last quarter of the nineteenth century which made Zionism again a living question. The reaction of a hundred years before had depended upon the belief that the Jews would receive kind, and ultimately equal, treatment in the lands of their adoption. That belief has been justified in this country, but scarcely anywhere else, and when, in 1895, Theodor Herzl began a political propaganda for a return to Palestine, the strength of his movement rapidly increased. Like the older efforts, the modern scheme is definitely and indissolubly associated with Palestine, and the rejection, in 1903, of Mr. Chamberlain's suggestion of a settlement in British East Africa showed the depth of the feeling for the Holy Land. Much has happened since 1903, and the success of the Zionist movement is certainly among the possibilities of the future.

A Clergyman's Wife
Wants Women to Know
Advantages of Internal Bathing

If women could only see the thousands of letters Dr. Tyrrell has received from grateful women in all parts of the world, thanking him for his wonderful invention for Internal Bathing, they would soon discard the medicine bottle and look to the cause of their trouble. 95 per cent. of all human ills are due to accumulated waste in the Colon or Large Intestine. Warm water, properly used with the "J. B. L. Cascade," will relieve the cause of your troubles and perfect health will follow.

A Winnipeg clergyman writes: "My wife is naturally sensitive about having her name appear in public print, yet is anxious that others should know what the 'J. B. L. Cascade' has done for her. It has really given her a new lease of life. For years she had been doctoring for Constipation, which became worse every year. Since using the 'J. B. L. Cascade', first about 4 years ago, she has not been sick a day, and has become robust and strong again. Should any person wish this letter confirmed, you are at liberty to give my name in private."

The "J. B. L. Cascade" is shown and explained by Cyril H. Orme, Third Avenue, Prince Rupert, B.C.

The "J. B. L. Cascade" is an invention, perfected by Dr. Chas. A. Tyrrell of New York, and has done more during the past few years to restore health and lessen disease than all other means combined. Ask for booklet explaining all about Internal Bathing and what it has done for others." It is free.

"The food crisis is grave and urgent, beyond possibility of exaggeration."—Sir Robert Borden

City and Town Labor
Must Save
The Food Situation

THE heart of the food production problem is labor, and the heart of the labor problem is the city dweller. City people must produce food if Canada is to do her full duty in support of our soldiers and Allies.

Men who are needed on farms must come from the cities and towns—there is no other source. The Provincial Departments of Agriculture co-operating with the Canada Food Board, can place thousands of men on good farms in this Province. They are needed at once.

Those who remain at home must also Grow Food

A War Garden will not excuse the man whose rightful place this year is on a farm. But War Garden service is needed from those who can do no more.

Every pound of home-grown vegetables, produced on city land by city labor, will be a positive addition to the food supply. Home Garden and Vacant Lot cultivation will leave the farmers free to grow more food for export.

The vegetable garden offers an opportunity for service to men whose circumstances make it impossible for them to work on a farm, to women, to boys and girls—to city people generally.

Be a Food Producer This Year

If there is a garden or vacant lot movement in your community, associate yourself with it. If no organization exists, do what you can to interest your neighbours in the War Garden campaign. Write to your Provincial Department of Agriculture for pamphlets on gardening and additional information.
