THE TRIUMPHANT HERRING

Herrings were sold at three for a penny at Berwick on Tweed, Scotland, recently, says The Toronto Globe the other day. The townspeople of Berwick on Tweed, which has not belonged to Scotland for hundreds of years either, were able to get all the herring they wanted free, owing to the tremendously large quantities which were landed. Owing to the shortage of labor, the fish curers were unable to deal with the catches, which sold at ridiculously low prices. The Globe continues to rhapsodize over the herring as follows:

What a feast the people of Berwick must have had on that day! What appetizing incense arose from thousands of sizzling frying-pans and griddles! Men would be lured from their labors by the smell of the succulent fish. What if the beefsteak of old England has gone to the bottom, it has emerged from the deep in a rich—may, richer—silver harvest of the sea! The sportive little herring is immune from the torpedo, and laughs at Tiptop's shoal of ruthless sharks.

The besieged inhabitants of the Sea-girt Isle may yet be saved by the smell of a herring! It would indeed be poetical justice if a mere sprat should be the means of throttling the all-devouring submarine. For the herring are the most democratic of fishes, they are the common people of the sea—the masses—and are the most beloved by their prototypes on land.

The common people have always had the highest respect for the herring, which is fondly referred to in England as "the poor man's beefsteak." The war has done much to level things down, and, in some cases, to level things up, in Great Britain, and the advent of the herring into society may be regarded as a happy omen for the future. The sight of an Earl, or even King George himself, scrupulously picking the vertebrae of a bloater would surely satisfy the most ardent Socialist. One would imagine Robert Blatchford writing an ode to the occasion.

While a taste for red herring is regarded in Great Britain as the unfailing mark of a plebeian, it has been known for a fact that certain aristocrats and blue bloods of both sexes did enjoy trifling with a juicy kipper in the secret of their private breakfast rooms. Such reserve and class-distinguishing marks will henceforth be abolished, and we may yet see the herring served openly in his divers forms and uniforms at state functions. Under its democratizing regime the "two-eyed steak" may become popular at the Savoy; and it may become a common thing for a substantial customer to announce in stentorian tones:

"I say, waitah, I will have a Digby."

A JOY RIDE

An official report has been sent to Ottawa from London, and given out to the newspapers for publication, outlining the proceedings at the Imperial War Conference. According to this report, the program followed up to date has little immediate importance in relation to either the conduct of the war or other imperial affairs.

The delegates, it appears, appropriately passed a resolution congratulating the king and queen on the event of their silver wedding anniversary.

At another meeting they discussed an Imperial Bureau of Microbiology, for the purpose of investigating fungoid diseases.

At a further session the Chancellor of the Exchequer explained a concession made to the overseas Dominions under the Finance Act of 1916, and the conclusion was arrived at that "further action is impracticable during the war"—in what direction or with what tangible object, the dispatch does not state.

Another session was consumed in a discussion as to the desirability of having a good news service between the Old Lands and the overseas Dominions.

Another meeting was spent in discussing ways and means of freeing Great Britain in future from dependence upon German supplies of dye stuffs.

Presumably this report is sent to Canada for the purpose of justifying our Ministers for making the excursion to London. It
