Scars of Townsite
Beginning to Heal.

The scars that the pioneers made on the Prince Rupert townsite are beginning to heal. Whenever man goes into the forest with the axe he spoils the plan of nature and an unsightly gap is the result. The use of powder and pick and shovel also has an effect which is most jarring to the artistic sense. Nature is always busy however and soon covers up the work of the vandal and beautifies the place once more. That is what is happening in Prince Rupert.

Take a stroll out into Section Two at the West end. There the young trees and bushes are growing up and are almost hiding the stumps. The alder bushes are covered with dark red berries, vying with the partridge berries for showiness. The red huckleberries show brightly among the green and everywhere there is something interesting. The rocks are already beginning to assume more natural colors, somewhat in keeping with the general beauty of the scene. There is a great opportunity for someone to write a natural history of Kaiaen Island which would be as interesting as White's Selborne.

Co-operation in Selling
Lumber Output.

The value of co-operation in all lines of business is set out well particularly in regard to the lumber business, in the most recent number of the Pacific Coast Lumberman. In discussing the question of export trade after the war he suggests that so far as the selling end is concerned the mills would do well to pool their interests.

It is well known that in the past individual effort in selling lumber has been a dismal failure. Bottoms have been secured only in San Francisco and the American interests have always secured these when they were needed and when Canadian firms were needing them badly and had been waiting long. Apparently there was a pooling of interests down there.

Discussing the question the Lumberman says:

"A combination of the largest mercantile houses of New York has been formed in accordance with the principle that co-operation is the panacea for many trade ills. What is good for New York should be good enough for British Columbia, and we, therefore, look with confidence to the taking of measures in the immediate future that will give effect to a suggestion of this kind, believing that when the members of the trade in B.C. come to study the tremendous possibilities that lie before them under such a scheme as the formation of what might be known as an exploitation company or trading company—call it whatever you will—they will accord it that support which such a scheme merits and which its importance demands."

"It is patent to everyone who gives the matter serious consideration that if the mercantile companies in New York can pool their interests, so to speak, with a view to developing and extending their sphere of operations, the lumber firms of British Columbia can do the same thing. Furthermore, it is useless to argue that what was good enough a decade ago is suitable for present-day requirements or that it cannot be improved upon. Other nations have already seen to that. Immediately south of the boundary line a combination such as has been referred to has been in operation for some time with marked success. British Columbia alone stands aloof though why there should be this conservative attitude taken by men who have the most magnificent asset of the province in their control is more than we can comprehend."

"An exploitation company would be nothing more or less than a selling agency for every lumber firm in B.C. It would be in a position to quote offhand, knowing beforehand the various mills' capacity for any order that came from either the old country, India, South Africa, Australia or New Zealand. Its officials would have all the data at their fingertips, and the organization would represent, not merely a section of the trade, but every mill in the province. There could thus be, it will be seen, no suggestion of any favoritism shown to one firm or any preferential treatment given to another. All would stand on an equal footing."

The duties of such an organization would be to keep in close touch with the movements of vessels along the Atlantic and Pacific seaboard, to note the trend of freight rates and market prices, to be in a position to give a firm quotation no matter from what port of the globe the inquiry emanated, and to see to it that the British Columbia forest product ranked as high as the product of any other country in every market in the world. Each mill would be assigned its share of the order which it could properly and efficiently handle. No more and no less. In brief, those would be the functions to be discharged by the company. The bringing into existence of such a body is for the lumbermen to decide, but it cannot be too strongly urged upon them that every day's delay means a greater handicap when the real trial of commercial strength takes place. And that may be sooner than many of us suspect."

Curious Custom of Japanese People.

When a Japanese leader fails he usually commits suicide. That is the custom of the country. When a Britisher fails he grinds his teeth and vows to make good yet. That is if he is made of the right stuff. Self obliteration is no part of the Anglo-Saxon makeup. Recently a Japanese merchant steamer went ashore off Cape Flattery. The captain committed suicide because he felt himself disgraced.

This Japanese custom is not caused by fear, for the Japanese are not by any means a cowardly race. Failure is the one thing they fear, and they do not often fail. They are making good as a nation, rising steadily to a place of mastery. Already they dominate the Pacific Ocean and their influence is steadily growing. They are a virile people and when they come to the point where they refuse to give up because of a failure they will have attained one more point in the stage of development.

IDAHO MINERS ARE OUT ON STRIKE

Boise, Idaho, August 10.—A request for troops in the Coeur d'Alene mining district was made in a telegram to Governor Alexander from six of the biggest lead and zinc producing mines in the northern part of the state.

All the miners at the Morning and Gold Hunter mines have quit work and the strike threatens to spread to the other producing properties which furnish nearly 40 per cent. of the lead output of the United States.

A majority of the strikers were earning from $7.65 to $11.65 a day on contract work. They struck for an eight-hour day and other concessions.

For her many children she knew what to do:
She made them most happy with Wrigley's for all—
It kept them in trim at a cost very small!

"The food crisis is grave and urgent, beyond possibility of exaggeration."—Sir Robert Borden

City and Town Labor
Must Save
The Food Situation

THE heart of the food production problem is labor, and the heart of the labor problem is the city dweller. City people must produce food if Canada is to do her full duty in support of our soldiers and Allies.

Men who are needed on farms must come from the cities and towns—there is no other source. The Provincial Departments of Agriculture co-operating with the Canada Food Board, can place thousands of men on good farms in this Province. They are needed at once.

Those who remain at home must also Grow Food

A War Garden will not excuse the man whose rightful place this year is on a farm. But War Garden service is needed from those who can do no more.

Every pound of home-grown vegetables, produced on city land by city labor, will be a positive addition to the food supply. Home Garden and Vacant Lot cultivation will leave the farmers free to grow more food for export.

The vegetable garden offers an opportunity for service to men whose circumstances make it impossible for them to work on a farm, to women, to boys and girls—to city people generally.

Be a Food Producer This Year

If there is a garden or vacant lot movement in your community, associate yourself with it. If no organization exists, do what you can to interest your neighbours in the War Garden campaign. Write to your Provincial Department of Agriculture for pamphlets on gardening and additional information.
