An interesting feature of the Atlin country is the fox farms, of which there are nearly a dozen. INDIAN DRUNK WITH AKSHIMA IS CONVICTED

George Williams and Kate Ryan Had Been Intoxicated for Week When Caught By Police.

Dominion Constable Watkinson and Provincial Constable Logan recently made a raid on the Naas Indians and arrested George Williams of Aiyansh and brought him to town where he was yesterday convicted of having intoxicating liquor in his possession. He was tried before C. C. Perry, Indian agent, and judgment was reserved. He is an old offender, having served six months in a recent occasion.

With Williams when the raid was made was Kate Ryan, the woman who it is alleged makes the liquor. They were at a point about eighty miles up the river and were both intoxicated and in a filthy condition.

The liquor they make is known as akshimal, a native drink manufactured from berries, yeast and sugar, pain killer and other ingredients. It is allowed to ferment and when ready for drinking contains a large amount of alcohol.

Judging from appearances the two Indians had been drinking for a week or more and were in a horrible condition. The woman is of a chief's family and she, in common with a number of the chiefs, are among the leaders in the vice of making and drinking the native liquor. A writ has been issued for her arrest and she will be brought here for trial very soon. At the time when caught she was too drunk to be removed.

FRENCH FARMERETTES CARRY ON DURING WAR

Canada loves to tell of her girl heroes of pioneer days. For generations and even centuries some of the present war farmerette heroines of France will be remembered. Among these is a girl of fourteen living at Morannes in the Loire. Her mother was dead and she was "little mother" to three younger than herself. Her father was called to the colors and marched away, leaving a large farm to the care of this already too-heavily burdened child. She managed the farm so well, however, that the Prefet of the Maine et Loire thanked her publicly.

Two young sisters say their three brothers march away to war and found themselves responsible for a sixty-acre farm, twenty-five cows and five horses. They "carried on" valiantly and cheerfully to the benefit of the community where they lived. At the other end of the line stand the poor; old grandmothers, whose life of heavy toil seemed ended and who were enjoying a well-earned release from responsibilities. Upon these war has laid a heavy hand, and among the ruins of their beloved homes they have planted vegetables; over the shell torn and down-trodden fields they have attempted to guide the plough and sow the crops. That was in 1916, and still goes on, and yet the farmerette is mentioned in Canada as more or less of a novelty in 1918! What a contrast between the flower-bedecked meadows of Canada and the shell-torn fields of France! But surely the spirit that animates the women in both lands is the same.
