On Night Schools

By John Kyle,
Organizer of Technical Education.

The Rotarian motto "He profits most who serves best," which has been brought into prominence lately, is simply another statement of the truism that success comes with efficiency, and it seems more than ever necessary at the present time to keep this motto clearly in view. The patriotic duty of every man and woman today is undoubtedly to take steps to become skilful and proficient at the tasks in which they find themselves engaged.

In order that such a determination may materialize the Board of School Trustees are considering the question of opening night schools but in order that the scheme may be a success they must rely on the co-operation of all parents, employers of labor and all young men and women.

The first war loan contracted by the American nation amounted to $7,000,000,000, and the bill to be paid for, obtaining the loan and repaying the principal of this immense sum is estimated at one and a half million dollars per day. The method adopted by this far-seeing nation for repaying their war loan is by incurring a further expenditure in order to increase the productive capacity of the wage earners. For this special purpose the Smith-Hughes Bill has been passed into law and gradually increasing sums will be paid from the national treasury to the various states in support of technical education. These sums will range from $1,700,000 to $7,200,000. The American nation recognizes the principle that specialized forms of vocational education should be provided for children over fourteen years of age who desire or need such training. The fact is also recognized that the state should have the responsibility for the training and educational welfare of all children until they become at least sixteen years of age, and the state is prepared to pay for the work. The citizen, the teacher, the manufacturer and the worker seem to be entering into the spirit of this progressive movement and seem determined to equip themselves for service and consequently for profit. The future of the nation rests not only on increased production but on improved production.

The only democratic Canadian movement in a similar direction is seen in the organizing of night schools and if the rising generation of British Columbia is to be enabled to compete with our friends across the line every endeavor must be made to create a desire for efficiency by providing such means of training at public expense.

It is told on good authority that on a certain day of the opening of the war in one of the large factories in Germany, a bell rang and all the machinery stopped. Every man gathered up his tools, his jigs and blueprints, walked up to the storekeeper and handed them in. A certain percentage of the men went to the paymaster, drew their pay and went to the army. The others went to a different storeroom, received new drawings, new jigs, and new material, went back to their machines and in two hours from the time the machinery had stopped the factory was running again full speed, turning out munitions.

At the close of the war it is altogether probable that the German government will have its plans just as well prepared for competition in commerce and industry and figuratively speaking within two hours after the war machinery stops the industrial machinery will start again.

Efficiency is the order of the day; he profits most who serves best. "A man's heart must be in his skill and a man's soul in his craftsmanship."

Princess Mary has been appointed honorary commander and colonel-in-chief of the Royal Scots (Lothian Regiment) the oldest in the British army. This regiment has a splendid record, and although the first name it bears on the colors is that of the victory of Blenheim in 1704, it existed at least a quarter of a century prior to this date.
