BATTLE STORIES FROM THE FRONT

Human Interest Sidelights on the War as Seen by an Officer At the Firing Line.

INTERESTING INCIDENTS IN EYEWITNESS' LETTER

The breaking of the Hindenburg switch line has brought us into country which we have never occupied before, writes Lieut. A. A. Milne. As a consequence of this we have been able to rescue a few French civilians from German hands. At Ecourt St. Quentin there had been two hundred of them living among the Germans for the last four years. Three days before the British arrived a German officer went from house to house, ordering the inhabitants to pack up and prepare to leave. A few infirm old women were left behind, while some of the men managed to hide in cellars. They had got hold of gas masks somehow and they put these on and lay there while the battle went on above them. They could hear the tramp of men marching out and the rumble of the transport moving eastward, and then there was a long silence. After waiting some time, one of them ventured out into the daylight. To his dismay he came across a German soldier—the last of them.

"You ought to be out of this," said the German. "Don't you know the English are coming?"

"When?" asked the Frenchman in pretended alarm.

"Now at once. I'm the last to go."

"Then I must go and pack my bag," said the Frenchman with great presence of mind, and dived below again. He told the others, and a little while later they walked out into the arms of the British, the first they had seen since 1914.

"Booby-Traps."

But whenever he retreats the Hun leaves his own special "booby-traps" behind him, so that entering into an evacuated village is a thing which must be done carefully. The most innocent-looking "souvenir" may blow a man to bits and it is necessary for specialized parties of men to disconnect any of these little contrivances before the troops can settle down comfortably. The latest devilment reported tells of a kitten nailed by its paws to the door, and of an impetuous Briton who rushed up and took out the nails—and was blown up; all of which would seem to a German to be according to the best traditions of twentieth century warfare.

There have been some strange situations as the result of our rapid advance. On one occasion our troops were actually holding the old Hindenburg line, while the German troops were in our old trenches to the west of it and facing eastwards. As one officer prisoner said, he expected frontal attacks or even flank attacks, but he objected to being attacked from behind. It didn't seem to him to be good form; at least, not when it was done by the British.

The German Dude.

Perhaps it was some sudden reversal of positions which accounted for the capture of another prisoner, who is generally regarded as the most important-looking visitor whom we have entertained as yet. He was a young cavalry officer in a sky blue coat with a red collar and the most beautiful leather boots, just back from a leave which must have caused something of a flutter among the German women. Accompanied by a mounted servant who carried his kit, he made a superb entry into what he thought were the German lines and from there a less superb exit into what he discovered was the prisoners' cage. For hours afterwards he might have been seen, pacing up and down, too proud to speak even to his fellow German officers, and evidently waiting for Foch or Haig to apologize to him for the rude treatment he had suffered.

Town Major Arrives.

Another welcome but unusual guest was a town major, who was peacefully pursuing his avocations many miles behind what was supposed to be his front line. In the British army a town major is generally regarded as the lucky possessor of a "crushy job." Good infantrymen are town majors in their dreams, and wake up to find themselves still in the trenches. For a town major to go to sleep in his comfortable bed and wake up and find himself in a prisoner's cage must indeed be a shock.
