DAILY EDITION. Saturday, Nov. 2, 1918.

Harvest of the Seas Is Almost Continuous.

Did you ever think that here in Prince Rupert the harvest lasts for about ten months in the year instead of one as it does on the prairies. During ten months of the year there is a steady income, more regular than that of a poultry farm. The crop is there waiting all the time. All that is necessary is to go out and harvest it.

In some of the coast towns it is often said: "The place to do business is in the prairie towns among the farmers where there is a steady production and the harvest comes regularly every year. There the business is sure because the farmers are prosperous.

If that can be said of the farmers on the prairies, how much more is it true in a place like Prince Rupert where the product of the workmen's toil is being marketed every day, where the demand is steady and the supply sure. No hail storm comes along here and in a few minutes blots out the work of the year. Week after week the fisherman brings in his catch and gets paid for it, and then is in a position to spend what he has earned.

The Only Fly In the Ointment.

There is but one fault to find, and that is that Prince Rupert does not get anything like as much of the fishing business as she might. She is doing well but she might do much better. Too many of the fishermen go to the American cities to market their catch because Prince Rupert has not the facilities. There is no proper accommodation for boats and not sufficient attention paid to the needs of the fishermen. In every other respect Prince Rupert has the advantage. She is doing business in spite of herself. She is doing little if anything to induce the fishermen to come here, yet they come, for the city happens to be at the terminus of a transcontinental railway.

In the prairie cities the businessmen build elevators, they induce capitalists to come in and build other elevators, for they know that there must be many buyers else the farmers will not come. The more buyers there are, the more business goes to that town. So it is with fish. The product of the seas is taken to the port where the marketing facilities are the very best. The more fish buyers, the better the fishermen like it and the more business comes this way. The better the facilities are for the men's boats, and the better the entertainment for the men, the more come here.

Resident Fishermen Better than Transient.

What the town needs is more resident fishermen, men who will live here with their families and who will fish when the weather is good and build more boats for themselves when the weather is bad. That is the ideal. The lumber mill is here now and it should be an economical thing for a fisherman to tie up for a month or two during the bad weather and build himself a new hull in order to enlarge his facilities during the coming season. If a fisherman builds a new boat each winter he will soon have a fleet that will make him a pile of money. He will increase the business of the port, and he will be adding to the health, wealth and happiness of the nation. The opportunity is here. The brains and skill and energy are all that are needed to bring about the desired results—brains and skill and energy, both on the part of the men who fish and the men who make money from the fishermen. There might be much more of a community of interest than there seems to be at present.

Team Work Needed for Few Days

While the people of Prince Rupert, in common with the people in almost every part of the world, are being sorely tried just now it must not be forgotten that the men at the front have been in much more difficult situations than confront us and they have come through with colors flying.

With courage we must all face the issue and keep cheerful. By helping our neighbors we can best help ourselves. Team work and community work is the order of the day.

It must not be forgotten that in spite of our difficulties here it will be necessary for us to continue our preparations for providing money for the men at the front. Victory bonds will be on sale commencing October 28 and we shall all have to do our best when the sale opens, even though we have needs of our own to supply.
