The Great Ideal Of a Great Man.

Abraham Lincoln once said: "Though I now sink out of view and shall be forgotten, I believe I have made some marks which will tell for the cause of civil liberty long after I am gone."

It is a great ideal, to make some marks that will tell in any good cause. It is probably the most any person can do. No man carries out any great reform alone. We often talk of a man having brought about some great change. His was perhaps the final influence that accomplished it. Without the co-operation of others, however, the work of one man is not of much value. The man who can influence the people of his time to such an extent as to secure their co-operation in the accomplishment of a great reform is the great man.

There are in the world two kinds of men, those who do things and those who criticise the ones who do things. The former are the motive power and the latter are the breaks. Breaks are useful if applied at the right time, but to be the motive power is really to live. The greater the motive power the higher and better the life.

There is no such thing as goodness apart from action. To be merely negative is to be nobody, neither of use to God or man. The man who simply abstains from evil is empty and useless. Unless he has in him something of the life of the Creator he might as well not have lived. The whole of creation throbs with power, with action, with movement, with growth, with ceaseless urgings toward betterment. Eliminate these urgings and you have stagnation which breeds disease and death.

Even death itself is better than stagnation for death is the beginning of a new life.

Rule of One Man Common as Ever.

There never was a time when the rule of strong men was needed as it is today. Socialists object to the use of the word "government" and would use instead the word "administration." It matters little what word is used, it is always one man who governs if the government is progressive and effective. For many years Lloyd George governed Great Britain. His was the influence in the cabinet and in parliament which brought about great governmental changes. He was the best man of king of the country.

Wilson is governing the United States today, but there have often been presidents who did not govern. They were boosted into office by the force of circumstances but they had no great influence on the life of the people.

Sir Richard McBride ruled British Columbia for many years. It was his great influence and his likeableness that kept his party in power. Whatever we may think of some of the things he did, there is no doubt but that he was the man who held the reins. Some people thought it was the stern napoleonic countenance of his lieutenant that did it, but later events proved that the lieutenant was the disintegrating influence that gnawed into the governmental vitals and finally sapped its lifeblood. Sir Richard was the ruler, and when another ruler takes his place as leader of the party there will be hope that it will be regenerated and once more be fit to assume the reins of government. A ruler is needed in every organization, in Dominion government, provincial government or city government. Even in family government there is always one prevailing influence.

Diplomacy Takes

Precedence Over Fighting.

Big battles are no longer big news. The things that interest the public now are diplomatic moves such as peace negotiations. On Saturday the big news of the day was the complete terms of the armistice with Turkey as published in this paper. Accounts of the victories of the Allies were not only given smaller headlines but read with much less interest than were the terms which Turkey was forced to accept.

Battles may again become of first importance to the public, especially if there should be fighting on German soil. There is every probability, however, that Germany will surrender rather than have her country invaded. With Austria out, her people will hardly stand for further fighting. Already there are mutterings and internal ebullitions which indicate that before long the fires of revolution are likely to burst forth, and that will be the end.

WRIGLEY'S

A Soldier's offering to his sweetheart is naturally the sweetmeat that gave him most refreshment and greatest enjoyment when on duty.

The Flavour Lasts

Keep up the Food Supply and Help Make Victory Sure

OUR soldiers must be fed; the people at home must be fed. And—in spite of Germany's murderous campaign to cut off the Allies' Food supply, by sinking every ship on the High Seas—an ample and unfailing flow of food to England and France must be maintained.

*This is National Service—
Not to the Farmer only—
But to YOU—to everybody—
This appeal is directed*

WE must unite as a Nation to SERVE—to SAVE and to PRODUCE. Men, women and children; the young, the middle aged and the old—all can help in the Nation's Army of Production.

EVERY pound of FOOD raised, helps reduce the cost of living and adds to the Food Supply for Overseas.

PLANT a garden—small or large. Utilize your own back yard. Cultivate the vacant lots. Make them all yield food.

WOMEN of towns can find no better or more important outlet for their energies than in cultivating a vegetable garden.

Be patriotic in act as well as in thought.

Use every means available—
Overlook nothing.
