DAILY EDITION.  Wednesday, Nov. 13, 1918.

Big Celebration is Promising Event.

The big celebration which is expected to take place next week is an important event and will be entered into with zest doubtless by all the people. The time of year is not very suitable for some of the events if the weather happens to be bad, but at any rate some of the events can be pulled off.

This is a boat town and it would have been a pity to leave out the boats. It will be a pretty sight to watch them if the weather is at all kind. It is to be an all-day holiday for most people and the day being one of public rejoicing he who will not close up his premises for the occasion will not be counted much as a citizen.

Now is Learning What War Means.

At last the Kaiser is learning something of what it means to be hounded and shot at. Perhaps even yet he may learn what war means and what the suffering is like that he has brought on his dupes and even more on his enemies. It may not be any good for the late Kaiser to suffer and yet would not seem like justice if he got away free without bodily hurt.

Those especially whose families have been the victims of the Hun brutality must feel intensely bitter against not only the ex-Kaiser but against the whole brood of those in authority who perpetrated or allowed to be perpetrated such awful atrocities. They have sown the wind and are reaping the whirlwind as the biblical scholar would say. Retributive justice it is to be hoped will not pass them over lightly.

Cruelty of Nature Crops Out in Kaiserdom.

Nature is cruel. That is her way. From the earliest days men have killed each other, and in the lower orders of life one feeds on the other. The kitten tortures the mouse before killing it and yet the sweet thing is the ladies' plaything. In the bird world there is the same cruelty as in the animal world. The butcher bird catches its prey and pins it alive on a spike in order that it may keep fresh until needed. So it is all along the line. Even in social life the outcast does not get much consideration. Business is cruel for the weak are crowded to the wall and the strong dominate and live on the fat of the land. It is just an outcropping of this natural cruelty in the animal world that seems to have urged the Kaiser on. He read the psalms of David and other scripture writings and they justified much of what he did. The later messages of love and tolerance and unselfishness and real courage were forgotten or probably never learned. The Kaiser was a moral perversion and he seems likely to suffer the fate of most pervers.

Could Trust The British.

That the Kaiser was on his way to surrender himself to the British is the latest fact, according to yesterday's dispatches. The German revolutionists, however, headed him off, and compelled him to take refuge in Holland.

The Kaiser had the choice in surrendering, and that he should choose the British commander is significant of the standing of the British name on the continent of Europe. That Kaiser Wilhelm would be just a little distrustful of the first French or Belgian forces his party came across may well be imagined. While the British soldiers have little reason to love Kaiser Bill, the Frenchmen or Belgians have still less reason. But at the same time it was against Britain that the Kaiser and all Germany vented the hatred which was the strongest feeling in Germany since the beginning of the war.

Notwithstanding it all, Wilhelm knew he would get a square deal from the British, and that he would not be disposed of out of hand. That he will get a square deal and all that is coming to him, Britain and the British people will doubtless see to.

After the War—What?

Now that actual hostilities have ceased, and although it will be some considerable time yet before peace conditions will prevail generally, those changes which must follow the four fighting years are causing great interest. The period of reconstruction will be an interesting period, although fraught with danger, too. There is the demobilization of the troops to take place. And there is the army of working women to be considered, who so efficiently stepped into the places left vacant by the fighting men. What of them? They have proved that they are fit for a man's work in many lines. Having proven their worth, and tasted the bitter-sweets of the alleged independent life, their former occupation of dishwashing and housecleaning is not so attractive. They will want to retain their new duties. Still, there is always room for producers.
