Coal is naturally a difficult problem, but it must be remembered that the liners that used to call at Portland often came across to Comox to get their coal, and Comox is farther from Portland than it is from Prince Rupert.

One piece of advice is always in order, and that is to shop early. By the time Christmas week is here the goods will all have been culled over and the best gone. Also there will be such a rush at that time that it will be difficult to secure such attention from the store clerks as is desirable.

England is at last beginning to realize that her morbid horror of brag has been a great help in the planting everywhere of the German lie that the people of the British Isles have made fewer sacrifices than those of other Allied nations and of the other parts of the Empire. When Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, a bold and determined enemy of the Germans if ever there was one, visited the Australian front the other day he told the men that 72 per cent. of the whole British force come from England, and that 76 per cent. of the casualties were English. England's effort has become a matter of course. But grief and anxiety, loss of money and of home, whatever the war has brought, is borne bravely and silently.

The Cow Bay affair is a very small one, and some of the actions of those who have been trying to make capital out of it are even more petty. It seems a pity that when someone tries to make improvements, there is always someone else ready to step in and try to block the scheme.
