PEACE CELEBRATION CLOSED WITH A GREAT GATHERING OF CITIZENS LAST NIGHT

greatest army had been absolutely defeated and had to acknowledge it. "Bitter must be the feelings of the late Emperor and Hindenburg, but not half as bitter as I could wish them to be," said the speaker.

The British navy which had been second only to our own was now mostly in British waters. It was a proper thing that we should set aside a day on which to rejoice that the horrid cloud had been removed. The great work the soldiers had done made them deserving of thanks and the best the country could give them. Had it not been for the navy, however, their work could not have been carried out. Within a few weeks after war was declared the German mercantile marine had been swept from the seas. Besides that the troops had been carried safely to France and food in abundance. The great overshadowing thing, the British navy, had made victory possible.

Canon Rix.

Canon Rix gave a happy address on "The Allies," in which he showed that the doctrine of "right is might" had been controverted. The peace they had fought for and won was not the peace of Lansdowne. Every man who had helped to start the war was either a fugitive from justice or had gone to give an account to a higher judge. The casualty list was one of the sad things in regard to the war. They must remember what they told the men before they went away. They were the cream of the community and deserved everything. When Col. Peck, V. C., and his men returned he should have a welcome that would make him glad he went away.

Lieut. Halliday.

Lieut. Halliday spoke of the Royal Flying Corps and the wonderful work that had been done for the army. He referred especially to the splendid work of Major Bishop, V. C., and Lieut. Commander Ray Collishaw.

Rev. H. R. Grant.

Rev. Dr. Grant, whose voice gave way as he talked, expressed the appreciation of the gathering at the effective work that had been done by women in the great war. He paraphrased the old song "We've got the ships, we've got the men, we've got the women, too." The war never could have been won had it not been for the work of the women who took the places of the nine million soldiers who had gone overseas. They were the second line of defence. He gave instances of what they had done and spoke of the work that had been done in this community and of what some of them had lost. The very best conditions should be secured for women in the future.

Sergt.-Major Adams.

Sergt.-Major Adams eulogized the splendid work of the infantry and mentioned the significant fact that the labor unions had taken so prominent a part in the celebrations.

Fred Stork.

Fred Stork mentioned the inspiring nature of the occasion. Nowhere within the confines of the Empire could they have had a more patriotic celebration. The ideal event had wound up in an ideal way. In the midst of their rejoicing, however, there was a tinge of sorrow at the memories of those who had gone, not to return. He spoke of the greatness of the occasion when the German navy had surrendered. It was too great an occasion for cheering, but it did not become us to remain silent now. "The flag still floats and, praise God, the end is not in sight. John Bull was never as magnificent as he was in the big struggle. Today he is the champion of right and civilization."

Capt. McNeill.

Captain McNeill, speaking of the Honor Roll of those who had died honorably and bravely, spoke of the proposal to erect a building here and asked everyone for support for the project. It would take several thousand dollars but they expected to get in the district.

Closing with a eulogy of Col. Peck, Dr. McNeill spoke of him as one of the bravest of the men who had gone to France.

Two recitations by J. C. Brady were most effectively given and well received. The gathering closed with the national anthem, after the sounding of "The Last Post."

can be washed over and over again with Lux and still retain the delightful charm of freshness and newness. Very desirable, this, in war time! Lux is so gentle in its cleansing power that it cannot harm the most delicate fabric.

How to wash a silk garment

Use a tablespoonful of Lux to a gallon of water. Dissolve in boiling or very hot water and whisk into a thick, creamy lather. Add cold water until luke warm. Dip your garment through the Lux suds many times. Work it about, gently squeezing the suds through the soiled parts but do not rub! Rinse in three waters—clear and also luke warm. Press the water out—but do not wring. Dry in the shade and when nearly dry press on the wrong side with a warm iron—never a hot one. Press creases from side to side and stretch a very little as you press. They will look just like new!
